NEW STUDENT ORIENTATION

Orientation is a great opportunity for incoming freshmen and transfer students to become acquainted with our beautiful campus and discover what it means to be a part of the "Clemson Family." During orientation, new students meet with an academic advisor to create their course schedule for the fall semester as well as learn about academic and social expectations. Orientation is the best way to get your start at Clemson University.

The transition to college is one of the most challenging and exciting times in a new student's life and hopefully a time that will make many lasting memories. Orientation strives to show Clemson is a special place with a rich history of long-lasting traditions, and a place to discover the wide variety of activities and programs that will help enrich the college experience.

Through the orientation program of tours, meetings, and receptions, students get to know the Clemson University community while they visit our academic and housing facilities. Orientation also offers an important opportunity for students and their parents/guardians to meet faculty and staff and to learn firsthand about the philosophy of education that will guide their studies at the University.

The chance to get acquainted with the University, make new friends, and ease some stress is what makes orientation so special. With the help of student orientation ambassadors, faculty, staff, and administration, this program truly encompasses "One Clemson!"

Viewpoints...

"Orientation was kind of boring! Some of the information was useful for the school year, but nothing said absolutely prepared me for college. But it was fun getting to meet new people, who I am friends with now!"

Heather Pierce

"Orientation was great—it showed me parts of the campus that I hadn't seen before, and I really got to feel the Clemson atmosphere. However, I do wish that I had been able to see all the dorm rooms."

Madison Meggs

"Orientation was a great way for me to get accustomed to my home for the next four years. Clemson did an outstanding job of making all the freshmen feel at home. Clemson is very similar to how it seemed it would be during orientation."

"Of all the schools I looked at, Clemson was my favorite by far! I won't lie, the climate was very attractive compared to that of Chicago; but the incredible spirit of the school is what drew me in. The moment I stepped on campus, I knew Clemson was where I wanted to be. Being here has confirmed that I made the right choice. I have found a place that I can call home! Go Tigers!"

Why did YOU choose Clemson?

rachel lindsay

« Ashley Myhal_transfer student

"I am so glad I decided to transfer to Clemson from Georgia Tech! What attracted me in the first place was the spirit here; the entire student body is so supportive of their school and of each other. My experience thus far has made me feel good about my decision, and I know things can only get better. I did not get the feeling that I was just transferring to a new school; I felt like I was coming to a new home. Go Tigers!"

« Jessica Thrasher_graduate student

"I chose Clemson University for graduate school because I passed up the opportunity to get my undergrad here. I spent the past five years at the University of Cincinnati wanting to return to a more rural area. When the chance came to come to Clemson for grad school I did not pass it up. I enjoy the campus and the region as well as the school spirit and the people!"

lauren traynham

« Lauren Traynham_in-state freshman

"I chose to come to Clemson because of the many different aspects that the school has to offer—from the athletics to the academics, to clubs and organizations. Clemson is one of the most involved campuses in the southeast. Clemson also offers many opportunities to better your diversity in different cultures. At Clemson, I have the opportunity to meet new people everday. With all these things, the number one reason I chose Clemson was to be a part of the Clemson tradition—and be a part of something bigger!"

FRESHMAN MOVE-IN DAY

Parade of Cars

On August 20, 2005, Clemson University had approximately 2500 freshmen students moving on campus. There is nothing like the feelings both students and parents have on this bittersweet day. They are overwhelmed by the massive task of moving into a new room, anxious to meet new people, and excited about the independence awaiting them.

Without even realizing it, students begin molding what the next four years of their lives are going to be like from the time they step foot into their dorm rooms. Students start to form bonds with people they have never met before and even closer bonds with those they may happen to already know.

It might be a little intimidating at first to walk into a room that is smaller than their bedroom at home and know they have to live there for the next nine months. Not only do they have to live there, but someone else does too! Not only do they have to share their room with someone, they have to share their bathroom with either two other people or sometimes even an entire hall of people. It is culture shock at first, but they learn to deal with it just like everything else that comes their way during the college experience.

For the most part, freshman move-in day is only the first of many wonderful college experiences. This day marks the beginning of a new journey for freshmen and their parents. Now you are thinking, “I had no idea that Freshman Move-In Day meant all that!”

1_Parents are always around to help during move-in time. In this picture not only is the cart full, but all the cars lined up have massive amounts of "junk" students feel they cannot live without during school.

2_This luggage cart is full of different necessities as this girl is seen moving into Clemson House. Usually after making the second or third trip to the car, students start to rethink everything they brought. It is amazing the amount of things that can fit into a small dorm room.

"I arrived at 8:00 and by 8:45 all of my stuff was in my room! The FCA move-in day crew had done it all! I LITERALLY only had to carry a CD case upstairs! The move-in crew was wonderful and definitely kept my family from a lot of arguments! It was great to have all of my stuff in my dorm room before it was hot outside."

To Live On or Off Campus?

Kathleen Davenport_on campus

"I have lived on campus all three of my years here at Clemson, and I have enjoyed every moment. Whether in the freshman dorm, sorority hall, or apartments, it has been a great experience. Living on campus is great because of its convenience. You have easy access to all campus resources without having to deal with commuting, and it gives you a stronger sense of being a part of the Clemson community."

STUDENT HOUSING

Housing, both on and off campus, is one of the most daunting issues pervading any student's mind. The question of where to live, and with whom, is one of the first adult decisions a college student has the opportunity to make. For the next whole year the people you choose to live with and the place you live in will influence the way you think, the music you listen to, and even whether the year will be full of good hair days or bad ones. Housing is an important decision, but fortunately the campus and city of Clemson offer an almost unlimited number of housing options to help students make the right choice.

The Clemson campus has over twenty different residence halls. One of these is a 1950's hotel-turned-apartment, the Clemson House. Clemson House contains both dorm rooms and apartments (with kitchens) and is a popular housing choice for upperclassmen. Amanda Gurganis, a junior English major, enjoys the ease of living on campus. "I like living on campus because of the convenience of being able to walk to classes and not deal with finding a parking spot," she says.

Carrie Eckel, a junior in Language and International Trade, enjoys the freedom of off-campus life. Carrie and three of her friends decided to lease an apartment in University Village, an apartment complex located minutes away from the Clemson campus. Though she owns that "it would be nice living on campus so we could walk everywhere," she likes the fact that off-campus rooms are bigger than those on campus. Many apartment complexes offer extra amenities such as swimming pools, exercise rooms, and even tanning facilities to entice students to live off campus.

Whether living on campus or off, keeping an open mind about new people and situations will make for a satisfying housing experience.

That is the Question...

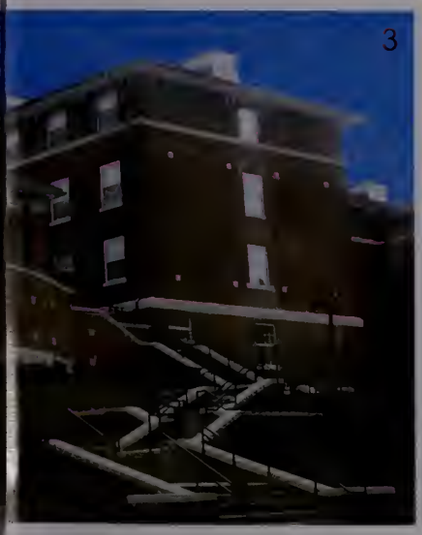
Khristine Fullante_off campus

"Through my years at Clemson, I have experienced both on-campus and off-campus living. My first year here I lived in the Lightsey Bridge Apartments. Although it was a wonderful time for me, I still felt that I needed to have the experience and freedom of off-campus living. Ever since moving off campus, I believe having 'my own place' and bills taught me more responsibility and management with both time and money."



1_Many students enjoy the comforts of the High Rises that consist of Byrnes, Lever and Manning. They are on the east part of campus allowing easy access to the Hendrix Center and Schilletter.

2_Fairly new to the on-campus housing list are the Stadium Suites located on the west side of campus. Students tend to find these especially convenient when it comes to football game days.

3_The recently renovated Greek Quad reopened in the fall of 2005. Several fraternity and sorority councils reside there including Interfraternity Council chapters, National Pan-Hellenic Council and the Panhellenic Council. This cluster of dorm rooms allows quick access to Fike and the Union.

4_The newest off-campus housing is the Woodland Apartments, located on Highway 93 on the way to Central. This gated community is a step up into the world of high-end living for students.

5_The University Ridge was rebuilt after a terrible fire destroyed them in the spring of 2004. The three new buildings opened back up in the fall of 2005. Many people were very upset by the horrible accident, but in the end the Ridge came back bigger and better.

6_Some of the classic off-campus housing apartments located around town are The Reserve and University Village, located in Central. The Reserve apartments are a few years old but attract students who are living off-campus for the first time.

Along with other new growth throughout the city of Clemson, one of the major additions has been the Clemson Centre Building. The variety of space here offers dining as well as apartments. Also after a bite of lunch you can enjoy an afternoon haircut at Charles and Al's Barber Shop.

CONSTRUCTION AROUND TOWN

Hardee's was torn down during the spring of 2005 to make way for more off-campus housing. Tiger Park Apartments is in the building stages and should be opened as soon as fall 2006.

Tiger Walk just recently finished up construction on apartments as well as a rather large courtyard. Tiger Walk is located directly behind the Esso Club and allows close access to the west side of campus.

There was a new Ingles built on Highway 93 right beside the old one that opened for business in the fall. The new building is a complete upgrade to the old Ingles and the new Ingles' gas station helped drive down gas prices in the central area.

Hold on to Your Hard Hat

Every year, Clemson continues to grow bigger and bigger. This year there seems to be a huge craze in off-campus housing. There are several new apartment complexes consisting of Tiger Walk, Woodlands, and even the ones above Clemson Centre. New apartments seem to be popping up everywhere; but with the growing demand of students wanting to live off campus, this is a wonderful thing.

Not only has Clemson seen growth in apartments around the area, it also had many restaurants come to the downtown area. The newest food establishments to come around are Quizno's, Moe's Southwest Grill, Ben & Jerry's, Firehouse Subs, and Beezer's. Some might argue that downtown is not the same as it used to be because it is no longer just bars. At least when students have the munchies after a night on the town, they will have more options of where to eat!

Another big construction site is the new Ingles on the way to Central. The previous Ingles was very run down and losing business because of its appearance. Once the new Ingles opened, it provided Bi-Lo with a little competition considering the fact that there are many apartment complexes closer to Ingles than to Bi-Lo.

Construction in and around the area will only create a positive influence on the town of Clemson. The physical appearance of Clemson will continue to change with time; however, the spirit will always remain the same as it was from the time Clemson was founded.

Transition to the Real World

Graduation marked a scary time for seniors as they got ready to embark into the real world, but many students found unique and creative ways to pursue their passions after graduation. While many students found themselves in the real world with a grown-up job, some students chose to remain in school and further their studies by going to graduate school, medical school, or law school. Many seniors, such as Ellen Chapin and Jennifer Zurosky, were excited about graduation, since they plan to move to Charleston to begin medical school at MUSC. "Even though I have to leave Clemson, I'm really looking forward to living in Charleston and getting started in medicine. I'm looking forward to enjoying everything to do in Charleston in between the hard work," Chapin said. Seniors worked hard to balance school work with applications, but the hard work paid off when they received their acceptance letters.

Other students were excited about getting a job and finally earning a steady income. The job search could be overwhelming, however, as students practiced potential interview questions and worked to find a job in a field in which they were interested. After graduation, Sara Barnett reported to Tyndall Air Force Base, training in Air Battle Management to become an Air Force 2nd Lieutenant. Some seniors had already found jobs by the end of the fall semester, leaving them with senioritis for the second semester. However, all seniors were sad to leave Clemson behind. Angela Crawford said, "I am graduating in May and will be going to graduate school to get my Master of Science degree in genetic counseling--what I have wanted to do since freshman year. I have senioritis but am not quite keen to the idea of leaving Clemson behind. I have grown as a person so much in the past four years and am so thankful for everything Clemson has taught me! These four years have been absolutely amazing. Clemson feels like home, but I know I will enjoy exploring a new part of the country. For me, graduating and moving on is bittersweet." This is a common sentiment shared by most Clemson graduates.

GRADUATION DAY

College: The best five or six years of one's life is a popular saying that can be seen on t-shirts around Clemson. While some students may not take five or six years to graduate, nearly every new alumnus from Clemson looks back on his or her memories of Clemson with fondness. Graduation marks an exciting point for new graduates as they celebrate the culmination of their studies, whether from an undergraduate, masters, or doctorate program, and excitedly look toward the future. While the larger graduation exercises take place in May, a significant portion of students complete their studies in December.

Clemson held its 2005 Winter Graduation Exercises on December 22, 2005. 1,261 new alumni, with their friends and family, packed Littlejohn Coliseum. Family and friends began filing into Littlejohn as early as eight in the morning for the eleven o'clock ceremony. Sixty-five doctoral students celebrated five years of research and dedication as they walked across the stage with their doctoral advisors, and Clemson honored 291 students with masters' degrees.

Faculty members and administrators filled the Coliseum as President Barker congratulated 905 new undergraduate alumni. Celebrations permeated the arena as the graduates did the cadence count. In an effort to help proud family members find them amongst the other students, some graduates even placed tiger paws and unique sayings on the tops of their caps.

After the conferring of degrees, five students were awarded the Faculty Scholarship Award. This award is given to the students in the graduating class with the highest scholastic achievement to honor their dedication to academic success. After the ceremony, new graduates celebrated, proudly holding their diplomas for pictures with family and friends, smiling, and knowing the best is yet to come.

A Taste of Clemson

Before coming to college, every freshman is warned about dining hall food. Dining halls have gotten a bad rap over the years, but Clemson's dining halls provide students with a variety of nutritious and delicious foods. A student's meal plan is not just limited to dining hall food though. If students fancy a change from what the dining halls have to offer, there are a number of restaurants on campus that accept Tiger Stripe or Paw Points.

Chili's Too, right next to Harcombe, is a great place to eat. Chili's has a wide variety of food featured on their menu including burgers, fajitas, salads, and baby-back ribs. Good food, combined with a friendly atmosphere and convenient location, makes Chili's Too a place worth checking out.

Another spot on campus to visit is Fernow Street Cafe. Located between Riggs and Freeman Halls, Fernow Street Cafe is a popular place to grab lunch or a snack between classes. It offers items such as deli sandwiches, grilled food, Pizza Hut, sushi, and more.

The newest addition to Clemson's restaurants on campus is Einstein Bros. Bagels. Einstein's is a great place to drop by in the morning for a cup of coffee or a bagel. They also carry sandwiches, soups, and salads.

So whatever mood students are in when it comes to food, one of the many restaurants on campus will surely tickle their taste buds.

Freshman Fifteen

Studies show that college students are likely to gain some weight during their freshman year. College is a new and exciting time when freshmen tend to focus more on their studies and new surroundings but less on what they are putting into their bodies.

"It hasn't been a problem for me. The 'freshman fifteen' is just a myth. So long as you maintain a consciousness of what you're eating, you'll stay as healthy as you were when you stepped on campus," said freshman Brad Green. Eating a balanced diet is important to keeping off weight. In addition to healthy eating, many Clemson students stay in shape by running around Perimeter Road or working out at Fike. Studies also show that students who get 7-8 hours of sleep have lower stress levels and have healthier eating habits. Sticking to a routine work-out schedule, eating nutritious foods, and getting enough sleep help students avoid the freshman fifteen.

Workout of Champions

For students who want to get trimmed, toned, and tough, there is only one place to go on campus—Fike Recreation Center. Located directly beside Death Valley, Fike has something to please everyone's fitness fix. From exercise equipment to classes and even intramural sports, Fike is the place for serious athletes and novices alike.

The 200,000 square-foot facility boasts six gymnasiums, an indoor pool, and even a climbing wall. One of the most popular areas of Fike is the fitness atrium, which contains over fifty different exercise machines and over eight thousand pounds of weights. There is also an indoor track and racquetball and squash courts. So, whether a student's passion is running, swimming, cycling, or just pumping some iron, there is something at Fike to accommodate anyone's needs.

Students flock to Fike for many different reasons. Some go to work off the infamous "freshman fifteen." Freshman Carly Martin says, "I go to Fike so that I can try to stay in shape after eating all that junk food in my room." Students also enjoy the social atmosphere of Fike. "I really like going to Fike because it gives me a chance to relieve stress and have a great time with my friends," says freshman Jess Cacciato. There are so many different things to try at Fike Recreation Center that students of all skill levels and interests can find something to do. So, get out there and Fike it.

Biggest Loser

The South Beach diet, the Atkin's Diet, and the water diet are just a few of the different theories that abound as the best way to lose weight. But for Janet Murphy, the old-fashioned diet and exercise program has been the best way to lose weight and stay toned. Despite taking six classes a semester and holding down a full time job—more than most students would attempt in a semester—Janet has lost over sixty-five pounds to date and is still losing weight!

Her success comes from her daily pilates exercises every morning in combination with cross training on her days off from work. She runs on the treadmill at Fike, rock climbs with her roommate, or tones her muscles with weight lifting. Yet changing the way she ate was also paramount to her success. Instead of crash dieting, she began a lacto-ovo vegetarian diet but still remains flexible in what she eats. "I feel that if you really want to lose weight, get motivated and bring a friend," said Janet Murphy.

Study Scene

At the heart of Clemson University's campus stands the Robert M. Cooper Library. Home to more than 1.5 million items including books, journals, and periodicals, Cooper Library has been serving Clemson students and faculty for over 30 years. The library provides students with a place to concentrate on their studies and to work on group projects. Even though the library is known as a place to research and study, many students will tell you it is more than just a library. People can come to the library to socialize and chat, grab a cup of coffee, or catch a nap between classes. The library is equipped with computers and wireless capabilities so students can surf the Internet or check their email. Cooper Library is an integral part of Clemson's campus and a great place to catch up on your studies.

The Cooper Library is a popular study destination, but some students choose other places around campus to hit the books. On a nice, sunny day the amphitheater is a great place to stop between classes and catch up on reading. Studying outdoors gives students a chance to take in nature while keeping up with their studies. The Hendrix Center is another good place to study. The second floor of Hendrix has a meeting area equipped with wireless and is ideal for group study sessions. If students need to take a break from studying, Einstein Bros. Bagels is just around the corner. Anywhere on Clemson's campus, students will find the perfect place to settle down and get some studying done.

Killing Time

You wake up for an eight a.m. class, only to not have class again until eleven a.m. What's a student to do in those few hours between classes? Students are coming up with creative ways to pass the time on campus between classes.

Dining halls and food courts are always packed during lunch time as students cram in time for lunch. Chili's Too is a popular option for students, letting them bring variety into their day in addition to providing a more restaurant-style atmosphere.

The more motivated students will head to the library, studying for classes that are later in the day or getting a head start on studying for other classes. Student organizations capitalize on students heading to the library, selling fund-raising items and providing information about their clubs in front of the library.

Fike is always a popular option, and the locker rooms in Fike provide a way to shower and change before your next class. Students can be seen playing basketball, running on the treadmill, and fitting in time to lift weights before their next class.

Hendrix Student Center often provides activities for students throughout the day, whether it is hosting the Clemson versus USC blood drive, providing a location for a video game tournament, or allowing vendors to sell novelty items such as jewelry and posters.

Of course, the infamous afternoon nap is always a great complement to the day, as students can take advantage of that hour in between classes to catch up on their sleep. No matter what you do, there are plenty of options to pass your time.

making Cash on Campus

Working during college is a decision that many Clemson students are faced with. The weekly schedules, disgruntled customers, and small paychecks are enough to make any broke college student run for cover. For students willing to brave the working world, there are many jobs available on campus. Students can find work through the Michelin Career Center's CareerNet or many participate in financial aid work study. Working at Clemson benefits both the students and the university in general. Students choose to work on campus for many reasons, including the flexibility of schedules and the availability of jobs. However, the most common reason students work on campus is because of convenience.

"As much as I love my job and meeting new people through my job, the biggest perk is the convenience of where Snax & Stacks is located," says Catya Hunt a sophomore and employee of Aramark.

Regardless of the type of job, working on campus can be an enriching experience that prepares students for their real-world duties and careers after college. Not only does working on campus help students become more responsible with their particular jobs, but it also helps them when it comes to their personal lives as well. Students learn how to manage their time between their jobs, friends, and classwork.

Not-So-Lazy Days of Summer

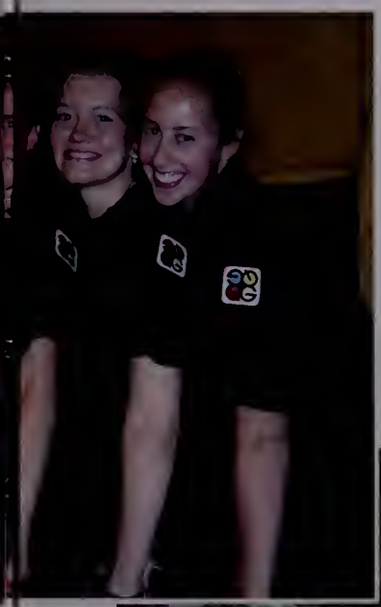
While attending college, many students are required to participate in cooperative (co-op) education programs or internships. Usually, this is a break for students, because instead of attending classes, they are most often earning money while learning hands-on about their field of expertise. For many students, however, their summer break is the only time to fit in a required job experience.

Students will typically gain more from their few months of having a "real job" than they do by just being in the classroom. The classroom is a good place to learn the fundamentals of a process, but the real world learning of what to do will only make a student a better employee in the end.

Not only do students get the work background, but they will also meet people and make friendships to last throughout their lives. Most students' housing will be paid for if they move out of state, but they will be set up with other students who are interning or in other similar situations. This is a great occasion for students to open up several doors for themselves.



There are many opportunities for internships and co-ops around the country and even the world. Clemson University has students interning all over the place. Not only is the University increasing its education level in the classroom, but in the workforce as well. By working in a field related to one's major, students are able to network with prospective employers that they can contact once they finish school. Any student that has the chance to better their future for after graduation should not pass it up.

Animal lovers everywhere can verify that their pets are more than pets; they are family. Among the many challenges students have to face upon coming to college, one of the hardest is leaving their beloved pets behind. Many students' pets have been with them since childhood and comprise a majority of their memories. Some students move off campus as soon as possible to adopt a new animal or transport their pets from home. There has even been stories of desperate students trying to keep cats in their dorm rooms!

The presence of an animal brings a sense of comfort that students cannot get anywhere else; and with all that college encompasses, a pet can make a huge difference on a student's morale. Although most students get pets for recreation and company, some have other reasons. Senior Jake Jacobson began work at the Animal Rescue Foundation about a year and a half ago and thought it to be "hypocritical to try to get people to adopt a pet when you wouldn't even do it yourself!" Some students who live far away from home, like Kate McDermott from Florida, find it "so nice to have a constant comfort and a friend by your side (literally, at all times)."

Pets, although reassuring friends, can also be a huge distraction at times; however, this is not always a bad thing! Pets definitely know how to keep students entertained with their many quirky behaviors and means of communication, which often take a while for their owners to figure out. Lauren Broadstone's dog Tucker, for example, will sit on her books when she tries to study. Jake Jacobsen's two cats like to pounce on falling leaves, pick them up in their mouths, and bring them inside. It is the different personalities that animals possess, just like people, that make pets so unique and often transform them into students' best friends.

"I balance school and my long distance engagement (Marie and I have been engaged for three years) by talking to her for two hours each night and visiting each other on the weekends."

Balancing time for friends and school is a challenging act for any student. But what about making time for children and a spouse as well? For students at Clemson with a spouse and/or children, they get to combine the best of both worlds, as they get to share the experience with their families while continuing their education. This makes their Clemson experience even more memorable.

Some students decide to get married while in college, while other students take a different approach with going back to school to change careers. Cathy Ryan decided to go back to school to become an elementary school teacher after she found her passion volunteering at her children's schools. She shares a common bond with her children. Adam, who is fourteen, and Kelsey, who is twelve, love that she has homework to do, too, and they never fail to laugh at their mom having to study. She jokes, saying it is her goal to graduate from college before her son does.

However, making sure that one's kids are cared for can be a challenge. Karyn Gambrell can relate, sometimes finding it difficult to find activities for children in a college town. Maggie and Harrison Gray love being able to share their college experience with their daughter Madison. With a little effort, they are able to balance both school and spending time with their daughter. For those who get engaged and married in college, planning the wedding adds excitement and makes the event even more special, as they are able to share in the preparations with all of their friends. College, with all of its opportunities and adventures, is made even more special as these students are able to share their experiences with their loved ones.

"Several of my friends and I got to spend last Easter with President Barker and his family because we weren't able to go home for the weekend. The Barkers' love for Clemson is what makes this school so special."

Have you hung out with President Barker lately? President Jim Barker and his wife, Marcia, are changing the face of the typical university president by finding new ways to interact with students on a daily basis. For example, President and Mrs. Barker hosted "Burgers with the Barkers" on his front lawn in the first few days of school to welcome the new freshmen to campus and to take the opportunity to meet with them. In addition, numerous student organizations were able to host drop-ins at his home, such as Mortar Board's drop-in for students with a 4.0 G.P.A. for the semester. They even spoofed themselves during Tigerama, filming an introduction of themselves sneaking into Littlejohn in full Western gear. The Barkers made students feel at home with a movie night for students on their lawn on Halloween and cookies and cider at the Christmas tree lighting ceremony.

The Barkers go beyond the normal campus events to reach out to students. One student was even graciously allowed to make his girlfriend dinner for Valentine's Day in the Barkers own kitchen! On the night before the First Friday parade, the Barkers went out to all the organizations frantically doing last-minute pomping and offered them drinks and cookies to keep them in good spirits. Stories of the Barkers' generosity abound over campus and keep students connected not only to Clemson, but to the administration as well.

1_President and Mrs. Barker host a cookout for the new freshman students to find out how they are settling in at the school.

2_Not only do the Barkers make sure they are recognizable to the student body, they also connect with parents. President Barker enjoys meeting parents at the annual Parents' Council tailgate.

4_President and Mrs. Barker welcome the Dixon Fellows to their home for a drop-in. President Barker even teaches a class and brings the students to his home for class.

Some of the best college memories are made on trips away from campus. From spontaneous weekend trips to exotic spring break travels to class-sponsored excursions, students find ways to escape the daily grind with a change of scenery.

Tests and projects take their toll on students, and by mid-semester, a change of pace is especially welcome. Over fall break, senior Ben Shannon and thirteen friends got away from it all by renting a cabin in the mountains of Tennessee. The trip gave them a chance to relax and enjoy time with friends in a scenic setting.

The need for a break is no different during the summer months. After Summer 1 finals, Stephen Slingerland and Kyle Campbell decided to take back their summer break with a road trip on their motorcycles. They traveled to Memphis and from there to New Orleans. After visiting Bourbon Street, they drove along the Gulf Coast, passing through Biloxi, Mobile, and Montgomery on the way back to Clemson.

Mission trips organized by campus and community organizations are another popular way for students to spend their breaks, while giving back to communities in need at the same time. Last spring, nearly forty-five Clemson students traveled to the Bahamas to help the island recover from recent hurricane damage. Similar trips to Louisiana and Mississippi were organized by various groups during the fall semester following the devastation of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita.

Trips related to classes or areas of study are also common. In the spring, a group of senior economics majors traveled to Belgium to expand their knowledge of global economic development. Packaging science senior John Halka had the opportunity to travel to Italy after winning an essay contest sponsored by the Italian government and the Institute of Packaging Professionals. "Having the opportunity to see the world as a tourist, a student, and a future businessman was the best part of the trip," said Halka.

The Princeton Review recently named Clemson University one of the top schools in the United States for community service. This award stands true to Clemson students' passion for community service as students continue to find more ways than ever to support their community and nation. Habitat for Humanity is an extremely popular way for students to give back to the community. In the two weeks before Homecoming, over four hundred students, faculty, and community members came together to help build a house for Habitat for Humanity. This year's house marked the thirteenth house that students have built on Bowman field, quite a feat as the entire construction takes place in a two week period! This year was especially unique as Habitat for Humanity coordinated with Lutheran Student Movement and other campus organizations to build the house in record time.

Students also channeled their efforts into helping victims of Hurricane Katrina and the other recent hurricanes. Students volunteered their time before the home football games to collect money with the Red Cross; they raised over thirty-five thousand dollars at the Texas A&M football game alone. The Philanthropy Committee of Student Government organized a donation drive, collecting and shipping over four hundred pounds of donations to Louisiana. Campus organizations such as TigerAid and Clemson Wesley Foundation coordinated trips to the Gulf Coast. Delta Zeta sorority held a competition with the chapter at the University of South Carolina to see who could raise the most money for hurricane victims. In addition, the Alpha Epsilon Delta pre-medical society donated proceeds from their Kaplan test drive to the hurricane relief efforts.

The Children's Miracle Network Dance Marathon was held for the first time ever this past winter alongside the University of South Carolina. Students gathered sponsors and raised money as they stayed up for twelve straight hours, learning new dances. Clemson students deserve the reputation of students with a conscience as they hold public service to an ideal.

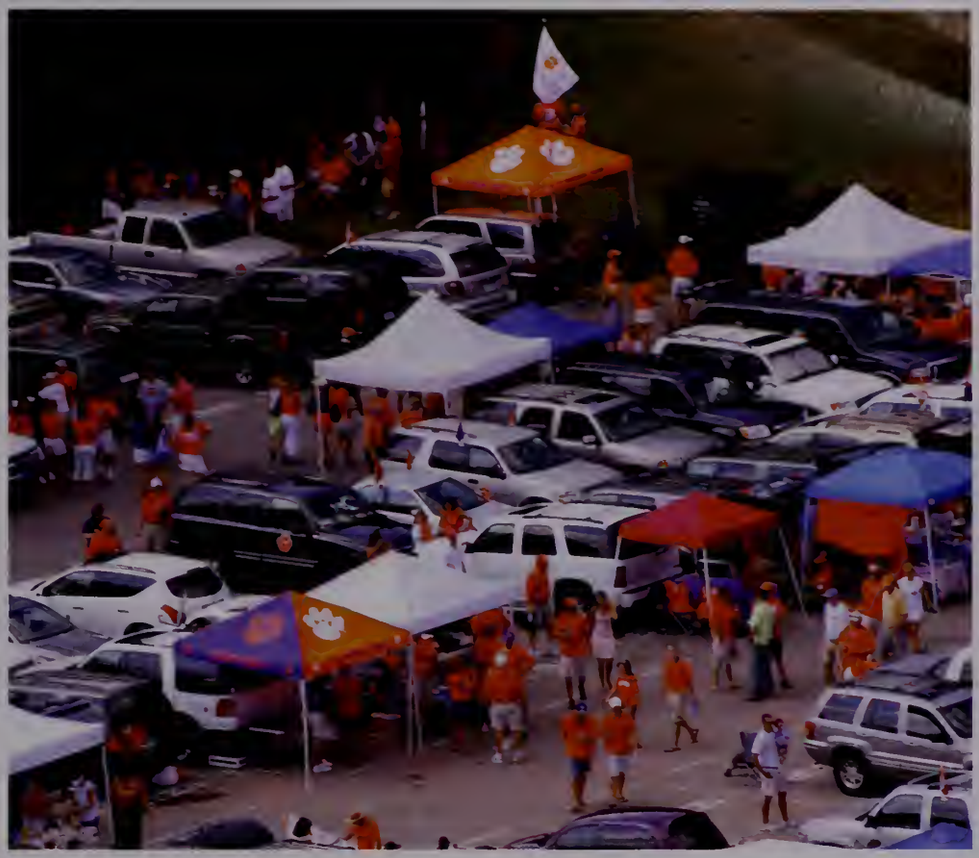
Fans fill the parking lot behind the West End Zone. The lot is somewhat smaller than previous years due to construction but that does not stop the fans from flocking to this premium tailgating spot.



It's More Than Just a Game

STORY & PHOTOS_rachel lindsay

Tailgating is more than just a pregame event in Clemson, it is a tradition and a serious event in Tiger Town. Fans from all over come to Tiger Town hours before the game begins and stay hours after the game is over. The parking lots all over campus, from the Brooks Center to the baseball parking lot, are filled with cars, trucks, campers, tents, and excited Clemson fans. Among the tailgaters you will find students, their families and friends, alumni, and other Tiger fans.

Tailgating is a great time for students and their families to catch up before the game. Parents love to come and feed their college kids with some good, home cooking. It is not uncommon at Clemson to find several generations of Tigers tailgating together. Elizabeth Hall, a junior elementary education major, is a second generation Clemson student. Elizabeth comments on tailgating saying, "Tailgating is one of the highlights of Clemson football, because you can spend time with your family and friends while eating lots of good food. I have grown up a Clemson fan, since my dad is an alumnus, and I look forward to football season and tailgating every year."

If you are walking around the parking lots during tailgating, there are several sounds you are likely to hear. Tiger fans love to shout the Clemson Cadence to get pumped before the game. Tiger Rag can be heard from small Tiger Band ensembles, on car stereos, and even on some car horns. Tailgaters can hear more sounds of Clemson if they head to the amphitheater 90 minutes before kick-off for a pep rally. Tiger Band, the cheerleaders, the Rally Cats, and the Tiger are all present to get fans excited about the game. The fans can listen to the band perform some of their songs and then join in the singing of the Alma Mater and Tiger Rag. Tiger Band then marches from the amphitheater to Death Valley.

Culture Explosion

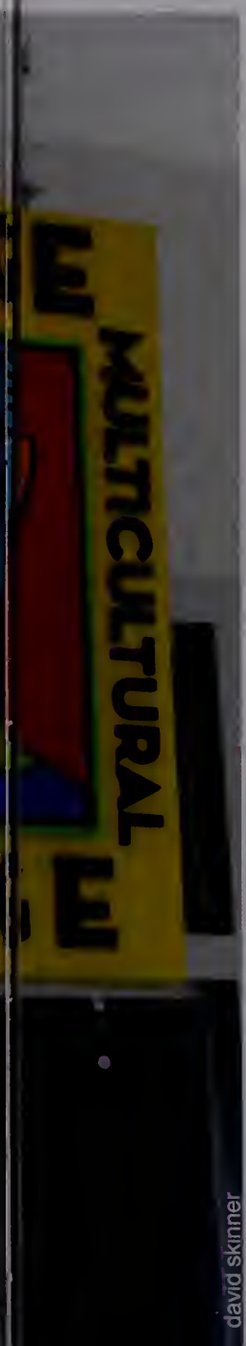
With students from over forty different countries, diversity abounds at Clemson University. One of Clemson's ten year goals is to increase the school's diversity while strengthening the sense of community, and Clemson is making great strides in achieving that goal. International Education Week was held November 15th through 17th as Clemson celebrated international education; events such as the 10,000 Villages gift festival allowed Clemson students a chance to purchase wares from all around the country. A study abroad fair was also held, giving students who studied abroad in countries from South Africa to Italy a chance to share their experiences.

A celebration of culture marked International Awareness Week, as Clemson celebrated the diversity of the campus. Fairs were set up around campus to bring attention to our multicultural campus, providing distinctive and unique foods and events unique to each country. Student groups, academic centers, and students all came together to celebrate the various countries represented at Clemson.



david skinner

Diversity abounds here, and with so many international organizations, it is fairly easy to see the world without ever leaving the campus. People want to know more than just where someone is from, they want to hear about it and find out what the other person thinks about being in Clemson for the first time. With over twenty student organizations that embrace diversity, such as the Japanese Club and the Hispanic Student Association, it is not hard for any foreign student to make new friends with people who want to know as much about them and their home as they do. For every student that attends Clemson University, an explosion of culture awaits.

Getting Around: CAT Bus Style

STORY_kacie lewis

"The CAT bus system is a huge asset to all Clemson students, especially on rainy days!"

Viewpoint

Opportunities abound for students using the CAT bus system. As part of the largest free public transit system in the nation, CAT bus drivers carry students around campus and to Pendleton, Anderson, Central, and nearly all of the off-campus apartment complexes. The CAT bus system is extremely popular for shuttling commuter students from campus parking lots to the heart of campus for classes. However, one of the most unique components of the CAT bus system is NightCat. NightCat, funded by non-university sponsors, Student Government, and Student Affairs, promotes safe social activity for students by acting as a shuttle service between downtown Clemson, off-campus apartments, and the university. Students can use the service from 8:00 PM to 1:00 AM on Friday and Saturday nights and can even call for additional service from 1:00 AM to 3:00 AM.

The popularity of the CAT bus system has created an unusual but lasting relationship among CAT bus users. Commuters become familiar with the CAT bus drivers who provide them with safe and reliable transportation to campus. The CAT bus drivers will often start up conversations with passengers when the bus is not very busy, something that students appreciate. Junior Cason Hund said, "The CAT bus drivers always go out of their way to help students and are always friendly." NightCat driver John McCormick even wrote a letter to The Tiger newspaper thanking Clemson for his wonderful experience as a CAT bus driver.

The CAT bus system remains a popular way to get to students' destinations, with buses running every three minutes during peak times. Student Government, Aramark, and the CAT bus system even sponsored Bagels on Board on the last Wednesday of every month to encourage use of the CAT bus system and increase interaction among the students. The CAT bus system truly does unite all Clemson students.

STORY_kacie lewis

At least once a month, a different holiday gives Clemson students an excuse to celebrate. With events like Death in the Valley and Trick or Treat with the Barkers, Clemson provided many opportunities to let students celebrate Halloween and show their creative side with costumes. Even though some students were not able to go home to spend Thanksgiving break with their families, they still celebrated the holiday with their Clemson family. Senior Courtney Jackson hosted a Thanksgiving dinner for all of her friends, complete with a turkey and all of the trimmings, so that everyone could enjoy the holiday together. Student organizations like Circle K sponsored a canned food drive for the holidays to help local relief shelters provide a Thanksgiving dinner for needy families.

The winter holiday season is always a cause for celebration as friends and organizations get together for celebrations. The Clemson tree lighting ceremony, sponsored by Student Government, featured President and Mrs. Barker and Tigeroar. Other organizations sponsored an Angel Tree, where Clemson students could join together to give presents to underprivileged children. Through adopt-a-family programs such as these, Clemson students were able to give back while celebrating the holiday season. The holiday break provided ample time for fun as Tiger fans travelled to Orlando for the Champs Sports Bowl and others travelled out west to take advantage of perfect skiing conditions.

The holiday celebrations continued with Valentine's Day. Tau Kappa Epsilon sold roses as one of their philanthropy events, allowing students to show that special someone just how much they cared. No matter what holiday, Clemson students took advantage of the opportunity to celebrate their friendships and Clemson.

Kick-Off Clemson

Alternative

College Avenue is filled with people during the Welcome Back Festival. Local businesses hand out coupons and other information to entice students. People left downtown with bags full of free goodies from the businesses and organizations in Clemson. The Welcome Back Festival helps kick off the school year annually.

Students are not at a loss for things to do their first week at Clemson. The calendar is full the first week of the new school year with events ranging from a picnic with President Barker to a movie in the amphitheater. These events help freshmen as they adjust to life in Clemson. They also serve as an alcohol-free alternative for students. The first Saturday night, freshmen had the opportunity to unwind after spending the day settling into their new homes. Bowman Field was the place to be Saturday night, with bull riding, inflatables, a climbing wall, and free food. From Bowman, the freshmen made their way to the lawn behind Hendrix for more fun and games, and even more free food. The freshmen quickly learned how exciting events with free food are to college students.

The events did not stop Monday. Tuesday, the freshmen were able to go to Fike's Rec Fest after their summer reading program. Even though classes began Wednesday, the events kept going. If a freshman was a little confused as to where they needed to go for class, they could stop at one of the Directions and Donuts tables for help. Students were able to relax after the first day of class with a showing of Monty Python in the amphitheater.

A week later Clemson kicked off its football season with the annual First Friday Parade. Old Greenville Highway was lined with students and local families. Local businesses, student organizations, and the Greek organizations made floats. The theme was Military Appreciation, which was continued during the first football game against Texas A&M.

Student Talent Revealed Through

Clemson's Big Stars

Plays & Productions

No matter what one's interest in performing arts, Clemson provided the opportunity to get involved. Clemson Players, a student organization, produced many plays and productions throughout the year. With faculty, student, and community participation, anyone who had an interest in performing arts at Clemson was welcomed.

During the 2005-2006 season, Clemson Players sponsored six different productions, ranging from "The Decameron Project" to "The Heidi Chronicles." All students were welcome to try out. Rehearsals lasted five to six weeks for about fifteen hours a week, making it a large time commitment. Students also had the opportunity to direct their own productions, like Elizabeth Colson who directed "The Vagina Monologues." Over $2,000 was raised and donated to a local women's shelter. Students also wrote many of the plays themselves, and special weeks in April were reserved specifically for original productions that were written by students.

For everyone involved in the productions, the experience was unforgettable. As Liza Lucas, who performed in "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To the Forum" said, "Forum's crazy humor and terrific score definitely turned out to be a crowd pleaser. I think it was a performance much enjoyed by the student body and Clemson community as a whole! Personally, I've always loved the theater, but my college experience would not have been complete without being part of this unique production."

Every year concerts are performed in Clemson. The concerts range in size, genre, and interest, and this year has been no exception. Names as big as Yellowcard, Widespread Panic, Ciara featuring Mario, Point of Grace, Dierks Bentley, Pat Green, and Cross Canadian Ragweed have graced the stage in Littlejohn Coliseum. Each of these shows has drawn a large crowd of students and local fans alike. Tiger Paw Productions (TPP), run primarily by students, works to bring these big groups to Clemson. Through surveys and student reports, TPP brings the groups that students demand. Clemson is able to attract such big names that would normally come to Atlanta or Charlotte and provide students with tickets at a discount.

Concerts were put on by groups that include Tiger Band, CU Singers, Clemson Players, CU Symphony Orchestra, Jazz Ensemble, Steel Drum Band, the University Dance Company, the Jazz Combo, Tigeroar, TakeNote, Impulse, Southern Accents, and Mock Turtle Soup.

One of the most popular shows this year was Tigeroar Live. "Tigeroar Live is the most fun show we do because we get to combine advanced lighting, sound, and stage design with good ole' a cappella music for a sold out audience. It doesn't get any better than that," says Tigeroar's music director, James Galloway. Clemstock brought together the various a cappella groups for an exciting show with a diverse array of performances from groups such as Southern Accents, Impulse, and TakeNote. Clemson's performing arts department graced the stage of the Brooks Center, bringing class and elegance to their performances.

Other exciting concerts this year included the Tiger Band's performance before each home football game. Dance Marathon

Miracle Network by Dancing the Night Away

The Children's Miracle Network's Dance Marathon truly was "The Best One Night Stand You've Ever Had." From midnight on Friday, February 17, 2006, until noon on Saturday, February 18, the participants stood up for twelve hours straight, learning fun dances and raising money for the Children's Miracle Network.

For the first ever Dance Marathon at Clemson, dancers competed against the University of South Carolina, who held their dance marathon simultaneously, to see whom would raise the most money. Former Student Body President Adam Hamond emceed the event. With constant bands playing, digital dance games, and table tennis, there was no room for downtime during the event. In addition, the sixty participants learned new parts of the dance every hour.

The sisters of Chi Omega won the spirit award, bringing a huge banner, personalized t-shirts, and an enthusiastic group to the event. Throughout the room, pictures and banners of children who have been helped by Children's Miracle Network were available so dancers could see who the money raised would help. Each dancer was asked to raise one hundred dollars through donations; and at the end of the night, all of the participants' efforts paid off, having raised nearly $16,000. Although Clemson had already collected three times what the usual Dance Marathon raises in its first year, more money was still to be donated, as the letter writing campaign continued throughout the semester.

Death in the Valley

Featuring Yellowcard

Yellowcard's lead singer, Ryan Key, performs the band's hit song "Lights and Sounds" during the Death in the Valley concert. Yellowcard fans enjoy every minute of the show as they listen to Ryan and the rest of the band play.

Every year, ClemsonLiVE sponsors Death in the Valley, a Halloween-themed party open to all students seeking spirit for the season. For the first time in the event's history, Death in the Valley was held at Littlejohn Coliseum. Students crowded into the many concourses of the Coliseum to participate in all of the event's fun and spooky activities, including a character artist, photo booth, and many fun games. The creepy atmosphere was enhanced by roving spooky creatures, a haunted jail, and a series of scary movie clips. For those most spirited for Halloween, students were able to enter a costume contest judged by their fellow students. Winners were awarded in four categories including scariest, most cost efficient, most original, and best group; each winner won a cash prize for their creative efforts. At the conclusion of the evening's events, students gathered in the bowl of Littlejohn where they were treated to the music of Pink Spiders, Acceptance, and this year's headliner, Yellowcard. The energetic crowd fueled an electrifying performance by Yellowcard, who seemed to thoroughly enjoy their time at Clemson. As the concert ended on Friday night, every student was in full spirit for the Halloween weekend ahead of them.

Martin Luther King, Jr. Day marked a day of celebration and remembrance at Clemson. The Pi Alpha Chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity Inc., the Student Government Minority Council, and the Martin Luther King, Jr. Enhancement Committee united to plan the MLK Celebration. The week-long celebration of events brought together administrators, students, and community members. Lowery was cofounder and president emeritus of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Many Clemson students travelled to Atlanta as part of the celebration and others participated in an essay and poster contest.

While some students relaxed on the day off from school, others came together on January 16th, 2006, for a day of service, volunteering at various locations around the community to honor the legacy of Dr. King. The commemorative rally and march ended at the Brooks Center, where Reverend Lowery held the audience enraptured with his speech on freedom and determination. High school students from the local area got involved as well, both by competing in an oratorical contest and by joining Reverend Lowery for the Tri-ART program. The celebration of events provided a fitting way to honor a hero.

International Awareness Week

Celebrating Diversity

& the One World Project

International Awareness Week and the One World Project are just two cultural events at Clemson. Both help to showcase cultures and activities that we might not be aware of without having both weeks set aside for different activities. International Awareness Week activities include food and free music to experience the fabrics woven throughout the Clemson quilt. A photo exhibit from the International Cultural Exchange Photo Competition helps to kick off all the different activities for the week. The week concludes with a festival on Bowman Field.

The One World Project, a student-centered volunteer organization, exists because of—and for—Clemson University students. Volunteers have the opportunity to plan, develop, and implement a wide variety of events and activities that help break down barriers; support reflection and healing; foster an atmosphere of inclusion; and respect and embrace commonalities and differences. Last year, the One World Project hosted speakers such as Elizabeth Birch and the Guerrilla Girls. Each year, the organization offers its "signature event," the Field of Flags, with the aim of creating a powerful, colorful, and meaningful exhibit on Bowman Field to raise awareness about tolerance.

Shattered into A Million Little Pieces

A Million Little Pieces, which had already been in circulation for over two years, truly skyrocketed to success once Oprah's Book Club added its seal of approval to the book jacket. Not all of the resulting attention, however, was in Frey's favor. The controversy was all in the classification of Frey's work as a "memoir" rather than a novel. Courtesy of thesmokinggun.com's investigative reporting, it became clear that James Frey had knowingly altered fundamental plot details and characters in his so-called life story. His most prominent backer, namely Oprah Winfrey herself, came to label the entire situation as a major source of embarrassment that she had never before experienced, as the lines of truth and fiction as they relate to today's society sparked debate in the larger literary community.

Tom Cruise raised a lot of eyebrows this year. Not only did he make the news because of his fist pumping, couch jumping proclamation of love for Katie Holmes, but his religion seemed to stir up talk as he brought Scientology to the forefront of every interview.

Cruise has actually been a member of the controversial Church of Scientology since 1990. But it was a heated discussion with The Today Show's Matt Lauer that stirred up conversations. Cruise publicly attacked Brooke Shields for her use of antidepressants, claiming that she is "irresponsible" for putting a "poison" into her system. Shields' response was essentially a brush off as one strange year came to a close for the former "Top Gun."

Ah, yes, it has been yet another "fine" year for Hollywood relationships. The hookups, breakups, and makeups that appeared in print and on screen alike have echoed across this celebrity-mad nation of ours. The pervasiveness of the couple pseudonyms has spread like a virus throughout the entertainment world.

When Brad Pitt and Jennifer Anniston broke up and entered new relationships, becoming Brangelina (Angelina Jolie) and Vauniston (Vince Vaughn), there was no going back. Soon Bennifer the II arrived as Jennifer Lopez left the picture and Jennifer Garner and Ben Affleck became a couple and welcomed a new baby into their lives. Then, out of the blue, Tomkat (Tom Cruise and Katie Holmes) jumped onto the scene (and onto Oprah's couch for that matter).

While the Hollywood relationship is best measured in dog years, we simply can't resist the guilty pleasure of their appeal either.

As our Tigers took on Florida State during the first quarter, Chris Bostic prepared for a throw that would come to change everything for this Army veteran. A promotional contest entitled the "Bi-Lo Healthy Choice Pigskin Challenge" offered one million dollars to the contestant who could complete the challenge. This long-time Clemson fan threw a 25-yard spiral straight into a hole that was merely twenty inches in width, sending Tiger and Seminole fans alike into a cheering frenzy. Bostic, who had just returned from Afghanistan the previous March, grabbed the attention of the nation as he visited Matt Lauer and Katie Couric on The Today Show the following week.

A story that began in 1990 of a woman having incurred massive brain damage would actually become one of the most debated headlines of 2005. Eight years after Terri Schiavo's cardiac arrest, her husband, Michael, petitioned to remove his wife's life supporting feeding tube. The 2005 hurricane season was the most active season ever recorded, with seven major hurricanes and over 100 billion dollars worth of damage. On August 29, 2005, Hurricane Katrina, one of the strongest storms ever recorded, slammed into the Louisiana and Mississippi coasts, displacing a million people and killing more than 1,000. With 80 percent of New Orleans flooded, hundreds of thousands were left without food, drink, shelter, and clothing.

In the wake of this national tragedy, Clemson University reached out to those affected by Hurricane Katrina. Thirteen students from Tulane, Loyola, Xavier, and New Orleans Universities enrolled at Clemson. Red Cross Relief Fund donations were collected at home football games throughout the season, raising a total of $62,912.05. A campus-wide donation drop-off day was held October 21, which resulted in thirty boxes, weighing over 400 pounds, filled with clothing, food, and other necessities to be shipped to the disaster area. The library raised over $10,000 through a book sale to aid libraries affected by the storm. Student organizations have also contributed to relief efforts by sending mission teams and organizing fund-raisers.

Pakistan's Risky Rail

Pakistan's railway endured the worst train collision of the nation's history this past July. More than 130 people lost their lives and many more were injured as seventeen rail cars were destroyed by the crushing force. The driver of the Karachi Express was held responsible for the calamity due to negligence. He drove into the backside of a fellow passenger train, the Quetta Express, already stopped in the Ghotki station. The force of that collision caused three of the rail cars to jump the track into the path of another oncoming train. It became clear that improvements to Pakistan's antiquated railways were long overdue.

Paris Gets Torched

Outrage erupted on October 27, 2005, in response to the deaths of two suburban teenagers in Paris who were trying to hide from police in a power station. Rioters regarded the event as a prime example of the unjust treatment of Parisian immigrants, primarily Muslims. The riots, which began simply as a local matter, spread through the regions around Paris, and by November 5th, Paris itself came under unrest.

Rioters set fire to approximately 9,070 vehicles over the three-week span and damaged public property as police battled back rioters for weeks with tear gas and rubber bullets. France came to declare a state of emergency and instated midnight curfews.

On July 1, 2005, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, a moderate known for often being the swing vote, announced her pending retirement. Later that month, President Bush nominated U.S. Circuit Judge John Roberts, a conservative, to replace her. However, the President quickly nominated Roberts for Chief Justice, instead, following the death of Chief Justice William Rehnquist on September 3, 2005. Roberts was officially sworn in on September 29.

Harriet Miers, President Bush's next choice for O'Connor's replacement, voluntarily withdrew her nomination due to controversy during the confirmation process. Finally, on January 31, 2006, Samuel Alito was confirmed by a slim margin to fill the final open Supreme Court seat.

The Road to Democracy

As both Chile and Germany elected their first female leaders, Michelle Bachelet and Angela Merkel, respectively, the fragile buds of a new democracy appeared in the Middle East. On January 30, 2005, came the return of free election after half a century under Saddam Hussein's reign. Security was high due to insurgent threats. The H5N1 virus, more commonly known as bird flu, has become a global concern in recent years. Many fear that this virus has the possibility of causing a pandemic which could cause millions of deaths. The first case of the bird flu was discovered in South African wild terns in 1961. This virus first crossed over from birds to humans in 1997 in Hong Kong, and since then it has shown up in eight countries. This deadly virus is transmitted to the human population through the direct contact of the feces of birds that have the H5N1 virus. The vaccine for H5N1, made from an inactivated flu virus grown in chicken eggs, is still being tested and is in no way near being considered the solution for the prevention of a possible pandemic.

London's Rush Hour Attacks

Thursday morning, July 7, 2005. Rush hour. It would become known as London's "bloodiest day since World War II." The British capital was hit by a series of attacks in which three bombs in London's Underground exploded within seconds of one another, and just under an hour later, another destroyed one of London's famous red, double-decker buses. Fifty-six people were killed and another 700 were severely injured.

The timing of the attacks brought about questions because just the day before London jubilantly celebrated being named the host of the 2012 Summer Olympics. Perhaps even more important is the fact that world leaders such as British Prime Minister Tony Blair and U.S. President Bush were in Scotland for the G8 Summit discussing poverty at the time of the explosions.

As London began its investigation, American security officials were already on alert, especially in major metropolises, such as New York City, which have vulnerable public transportation systems.

Veterans at Clemson

Freshman Jon Cox, 24, is a veteran of the U.S. Navy who joined when he was nineteen after only one semester of college. Cox, a computer science major, has found that integrating into college life—especially freshman life—after serving in the military is easier said than done. Cox, upon returning to school, felt alienated from student life, and sought out a support system for himself. He sought out Ken Weaver, the academic advisor and student services coordinator for the department of computer science. Weaver also experienced the alienation that Cox experienced when he returned to Florida State University after serving in Vietnam. The two with mutual experiences decided to start an organization that will help with the acclamation of veterans to Clemson, which they hope will allow the veterans to feel more at home on campus.

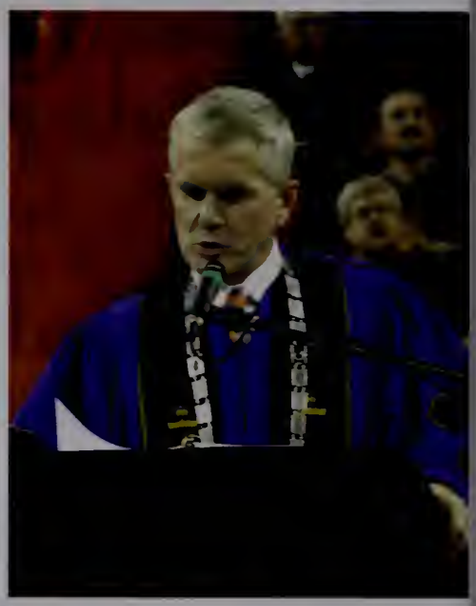
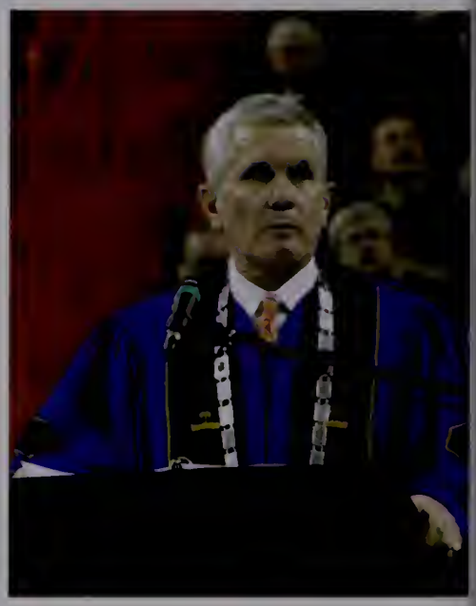
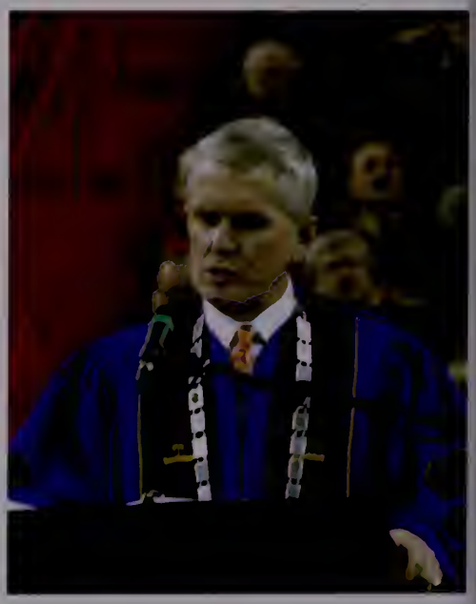
Academic Convocation







The 2005-2006 school year marks the 113th academic year at Clemson University. The Victor Hurst Convocation, named after a Distinguished Alumni Professor of dairy science who also served as dean of the faculty and vice president of academic affairs during his career at Clemson, marked the beginning of the year. U.S. ambassador to Ecuador and Clemson alumna Kristie Anne Kenney gave the keynote address, attributing her success to her time spent at Clemson. Prior to being ambassador, Kenney served as senior advisor to the assistant secretary for the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs and as executive secretary of the State Department.

During his speech, President Barker commented on the advances that had been made towards achieving the University's top 20 goal since the last school year, specifically increased retention and graduation rates. Following Barker, student body president Katie Bayless presented Assistant Professor Christopher Post with the Phillip Prince Award for Innovation in Teaching. Post is a professor of geographic information systems in the Department of Forestry and Natural Resources. A student government endowment supported by a $20,000 grant from the athletic department supports the award.

Dear Clemson...

CLEMSON UNIVERSITY

Dear Clemson Students:

As I reflect on six years of service to my alma mater, I realize what a remarkable opportunity I have been given. Every day I have the privilege to represent Clemson faculty, staff, alumni and friends both in South Carolina and around the world. However, my greatest opportunity is to represent you – the students of Clemson.

You are the heart of this university and you are our future. With your energy, integrity and passion I see every day on this campus, I know we have a very bright future.

Clemson is distinguished from other universities by our love of competition, our patriotism, our inclusiveness, our civic responsibility and our work ethic. Our best path to the Top 20 of American Public Universities is to focus on these distinctive qualities rather than trying to be similar to other schools. It is in these distinctive qualities that we will find our best future.

Thank you for the opportunity to live on this campus with you and to be a part of your Clemson experience. It is a special gift you have given to Marcia and me.

Go Tigers!

Sincerely,

James F. Barker, FAIA
President

Top Bound

The goal is to become nationally recognized by U.S.News & World Report as one of the 20 best public doctoral-granting universities in America. However, as this year's report showed, obtaining this goal is easier said than done. Clemson fell in the rankings in 2006, slipping from 32nd place to 34th place. But as President Barker has said, "This is a long-term process, and we knew there would be ups and downs." The rankings are based on a subjective measure of academic reputation along with statistical measures such as graduation rates, student SAT scores, and faculty salaries. In the past few years, Clemson has been making large strides towards achieving its goal: SAT scores of undergraduate students have increased significantly and graduation rates have gone up.

> "Our students selected Clemson because they wanted a top-quality education. Today, Clemson is one of the fastest-rising universities in America, and never before has a Clemson degree been more valued."
> James Barker, University President
> (in a July 2006 letter sent to all incoming students)

New academic requirements like the summer reading program, which seniors graduating in 2005 never participated in, and improved general education requirements for this year's freshmen have boosted Clemson's standing. Recent research projects and economic development initiatives also play into the formation of Clemson's academic reputation. In addition, the school is raising the bar when it comes to hiring new faculty, recruiting the majority of new employees from institutions ranking higher than Clemson. Over the past five years, the University has been working hard to update the library, information technology on campus, and the school's facilities. Even though its rank fell this year, Clemson is still heading in the right direction towards becoming one of the best schools in the country. Upon graduation, students will all be able to hold their heads high and be proud of their Clemson degree.

Tuition Hikes

According to an article published in the Spartanburg Herald-Journal in June 2005, a student at Clemson University during the 1994-1995 academic year could expect to pay about $2940 per year in just tuition, not including room and board or books. Eleven years later, students are paying $8816 per year. That is three times the cost of an education at the university a little over a decade ago!

Why the steep increase in tuition? In 2000, President Barker was a new hire for Clemson and presented the challenge of making the University a top 20 school. With that goal in mind, everyone's student plan had to increase funds to help hire better-educated professors, improve our facilities, and increase alumni giving. According to Alan Godfrey, the budget director for the university, the plan itself was not terribly expensive, but coupled with South Carolina's state budgets cuts— it was a "perfect storm."

Godfrey does not see the current tuition increase rate as a permanent fixture, which is good. If Clemson's tuition continued to grow at the rate it is, then in eleven years students would be paying almost $27,000 a year to attend this fine institution! The budget director muses that tuition is always going to increase, but it will slow to a more reasonable growth. This is a relief for all students, their parents, and their parents' wallets.

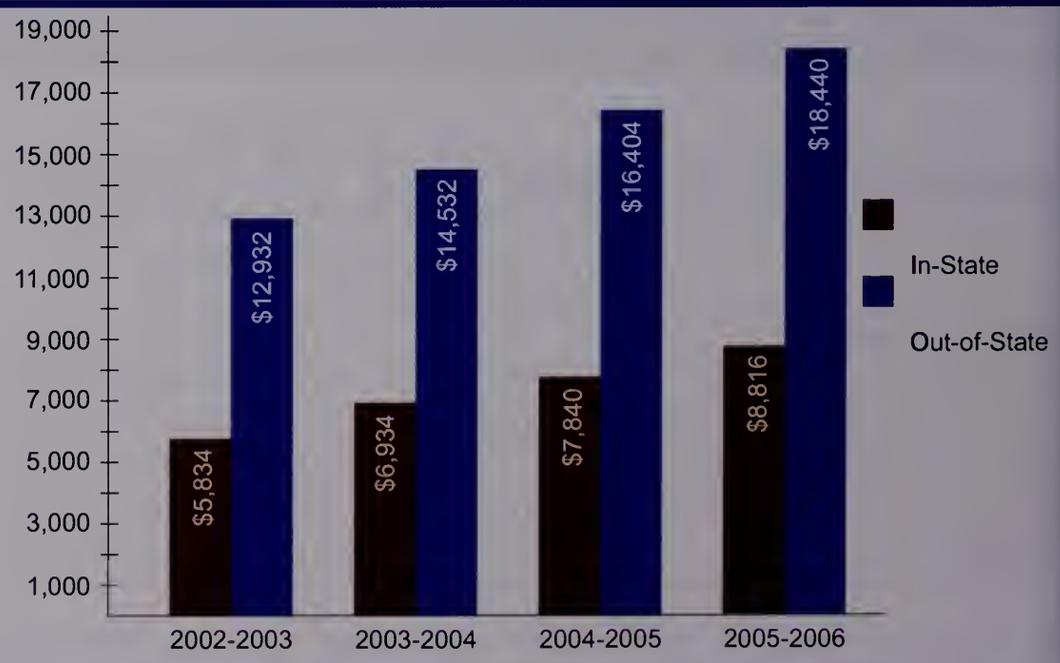
Tuition
Over the Last Four Years

Seniors have faced tuition increases every year of their college career, with this year's increase of 12.5% being the worst. Over the course of their time at Clemson, tuition for students graduating on time in May of 2006 has increased by a total of 77%.



Plus/Minus Grading

To students who attended Clemson between the fall of 2002 and the spring of 2004, the end of May 2004 marked the end of plus/minus grading. The plus/minus grading trial period launched in August of 2002 affected all undergraduate students, including those enrolled in 400 and 600 level courses. The purpose of the seven-semester trial run was to collect statistical data and to compare and contrast the regular grade point ratios versus the plus/minus scale ratios. Many students felt that the grading trial was a waste of time. "I don't want to do more work for a couple of percentage points when the end result does not affect my GPR or transcript," said Sarah Myers, a junior this year.

After the end of the two-year trial run, the summaries of the grade statistics for the semesters were available online. In the fall of 2004, the Faculty Senate also conducted surveys to solicit input on the grading process to see if the plus/minus grading system would become the standard grading method used at Clemson. In the spring of 2005, the Senate came to a decision to reject the possibility of the plus/minus grading system.

Summer Reading

Schlichtmann visits campus to discuss his role in A Civil Action

In an effort to prepare students for academic life at Clemson, President Barker implemented the Summer Reading Program for incoming freshmen three years ago. The program consists of three separate parts: reading the novel, writing a response essay, and participating in convocation at Littlejohn Coliseum, where students listen to a speaker connected with the text. Each step hopes to introduce students to the many different levels of college work. This year, students had the privilege to read A Civil Action by Jonathan Harr, a non-fiction novel about lawyer Jan Schlichtmann's struggle to defend families whose children had been afflicted with leukemia in Woburn, Massachusetts. Schlichtmann's speech at the convocation this year riveted students and professors alike and allowed them to connect to the text on a deeper and more insightful level.

The director of the program, Casey Berkshire, hopes the Summer Reading Program allows "each freshman student to have a common intellectual general education experience with his/her classmates." Most students enjoyed reading the novel and participating in the Reading Program as a whole. Freshman Mark Boerckel noted, "The Summer Reading Program is an excellent opportunity for students to get acclimated to academic life at Clemson." Other students, such as freshman Andrew Park, found that writing the essay for A Civil Action "prepared me for college work by becoming the first essay of many written at 3:00 A.M."

Students of Holmes Hall, the honors residence, take part in the annual Halloween party which included a haunted house. This event was co-sponsored by the Calhoun Honors College and RHA.

The Calhoun Honors College allows students to expand their academic and intellectual opportunities through everything from smaller classes to study abroad programs, such as the Brussels Summer Program. The honors college has over 1,000 students from 43 states and nine countries. Through the honors program students are provided with daily interaction with their peers and honors professors. Along with housing, the Calhoun Honors College has created a Living and Learning community in Holmes Hall where honors students can live and interact. Sponsored events, such as Pizza with a Prof and question and answer programs on honors classes, take place monthly to challenge students both intellectually and socially.

Academically, the Calhoun Honors College provides two programs, general and departmental honors. Students who choose the departmental honors program will pursue independent study in their particular major, often entailing the completion of a thesis or research project. Also, being a part of this program enables students to be competitive when applying for major fellowships and scholarships. Overall, the honors college is an essential part of Clemson's push to the top 20 and will continue its rich history of providing Clemson students with academically and intellectually enhancing opportunities.

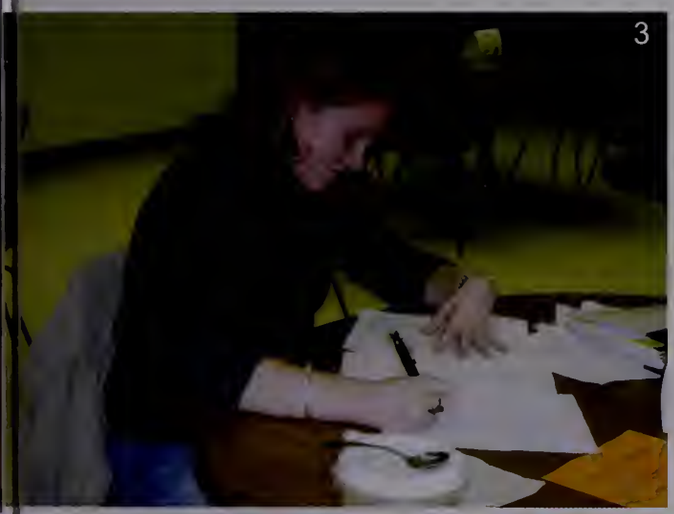
Major Indecision

It is hard to choose what you want to do with your life; there are so many options. You could become a surgical intern like Meredith Grey on Grey's Anatomy, a lawyer like Sandy Cohen on The O.C., or a children's book illustrator like Susan Mayer on Desperate Housewives. Each has their own set of requirements. Susan must have been born with an innate artistic ability to turn what is a hobby for most people into a job with which she supports herself and her daughter. Meredith had to truly love biology and chemistry to receive first her undergraduate and then her medical degrees in specialized scientific fields. She also had to be willing to not have a life outside of the hospital for her first years as an intern. To be a lawyer, just as with a surgical intern, Sandy had to go not just to undergraduate school but to law school, where he also specialized in a specific field.

To commit to something such as medical or law school for such a long period of time, a person has to know he or she is going to pursue that field for the rest of his or her working days. But if one does not inherently know what they want to do with their life, then the struggle to find a major is very hard.

One of the resources available to Clemson University students is the Michelin Career Center.



Students can set up a two part appointment. For the first appointment, students come in and a counselor speaks with them and gives an assessment called DISCOVER. On the follow-up appointment, the student and counselor go over the results from the assessment. During this meeting, the counselor will introduce the students to the resources and career information the Center has to offer. However, the Career Center cautions that the assessment is extremely popular, especially before registration, so an advance appointment is always welcome.

Experience of a Lifetime

Erin Yount (third from left) visited a mirador (outlook) on the coastline of Chile near Valparaiso, the city where she lived for five weeks.

The study abroad program here at Clemson University is an enriching program for students that provides the opportunity for CU Tigers to live and attend college in another country. This once in a lifetime opportunity has programs that last a summer, semester, or entire year. This past academic year, programs were stationed in Australia, South Africa, Scotland, Germany, and many other countries.

The study abroad program also featured students from other countries who, for a semester to a year, came to America to experience the "Clemson lifestyle." This year the international students were housed in Clemson House as part of the International House program in which the international students were placed with Clemson students. This was done to help the international students adjust more easily to American college life. Sophomore Claire Roebuck, from Scotland, was here for a year and says that her experience at Clemson was so positive that she intends to stay and graduate from CU. She says, "I love Clemson, the friends I have made, and the open attitude everyone has towards other countries. If I return next year, I know that my time here will be worth it."

While international students who visit the Clemson campus feel welcomed, Clemson students who visit abroad feel equally welcomed. Junior Cate Raff says, "Studying abroad in South Africa was the best five and a half months of my life. I learned so much about South African and African culture, as well as the European culture from all the other international students there. I would recommend studying abroad for everyone." The study abroad program is a great opportunity for anyone looking to broaden their horizons or just travel the world.

Concentrate on your Studies

Results of hundreds of analyses indicate that study time alone is a key factor in determining academic success in college. And yet, many Clemson students, caught up in their daily eating, sleeping, exercising, and partying cycles, never seem to be able to find or make time to review their textbooks and notes. Procrastination is common. Despite the recommendation to spend an additional 2-3 hours studying every week for each hour spent in class, the tendency is still to rush to the library on Sunday nights (when studying is so popular that available seating is limited) or early on the morning of an important exam. While this method does yield satisfactory performances for a select group of students, it is the cause of poor test scores for others. Particularly vulnerable to the effects of not studying enough are members of Greek organizations, Varsity athletes, and students participating in three or more extracurricular activities. To combat the potential for these students, and others, to become over-involved in outside functions and neglect school work, various study programs have been enacted.

Although most fraternities and sororities have historically required their members to attend special study sessions or to complete a certain number of study hours per week, the Interfraternity Council made study time mandatory this year for the fraternity system in an effort to improve overall GPA. Several sororities and fraternities also encourage group study from new pledges, as it provides them not only with time to study and to get help from others but also the opportunity to get to know their peers. The quality of studying done during these sessions varies, though. As freshman Kappa Alpha pledge Hall Provence stated, "It's a bunch of freshman guys trying to study. Sometimes we're willing to do this because we literally have no other time to do our work. Other times we'd just rather hang out."

For Varsity athletes, the situation is similar. With the amount of practice hours and the minimum GPA requirement, it is necessary to provide the athletes with a set time to study. Most athletic-related study sessions range from 8-10 hours per week, and the students are also advised to sign up for individual tutoring if needed in a particular subject.

The Right Stuff

Do you have trouble finding a job or internship? The Michelin Career Center is a great place to go for help! There are programs and services offered to all students to help plan, experience, and search for jobs related to students' majors.

One of the very valuable functions the Career Center puts on is career fairs. During the fall 2005 fair, 187 different organizations from around the country provided company information and recruited future employees and interns. Kate Williams, who works at the Career Center, explained the knowledge a student should hope to gain by attending the fair consists of "practice in interacting with recruiters." A company employee named Steve Rodgers was amazed with the turnout at the career fair because there were more companies than he had ever seen together. Because of this, he had expectations that everyone would be able to find a job that interested them. Senior Dan Burgess summed up his experience of the career fair by saying the fair "has been amazing. There was plenty of networking and opportunities to meet new people."

If a student does not find the job or internship they want at a career fair, they can go to the Career Center, and someone will help them find what they are looking for. The Career Center is very willing to work with students and help them fulfill their interests with jobs and internships of all kinds. If you have not already visited the Michelin Career Center, do not wait any longer!

Excellence in Teaching

For the past twelve years, the Excellence in Teaching Award has been awarded to professors of undergraduate students for their wonderful teaching at Clemson University. This award is sponsored by the Flour Daniel Corporation. The student body anonymously nominates professors who have done an outstanding job in the classroom. After all the nominations are in, a Student Government representative attends classes of the selected professors to observe the teaching styles and also to interview students and fellow colleagues. The decision for the recipient of the award is then made by Student Government.

The winner of the Excellence in Teaching Award for 2005 was Dr. Marty Williams, a professor of fundamental management and also a Cooperative Education Director. Dr. Williams has a real passion for teaching. He has been a part-time professor and full-time co-op director for twenty-three years. Dr. Williams is friendly and knows all of his students by name, even though his two classes consist of about 275 students each. He teaches topics that are critical for success for students and their careers. Business ethics, communication, leadership, human resources, and management are some of the topics Dr. Williams prepares his students on. He uses techniques to keep his students involved with the class to continue their learning.

This award is such an honor, but the most important reason Dr. Williams feels honored is because his students selected him to receive the award. Dr. Williams is thankful to have such a nice and admirable student nominate him for the award.

Dr. Williams and his family attended a banquet in his honor, and he received a research grant in the amount of $2,500. This money will be used to advance Dr. Williams' teaching skills when he goes on a trip this summer to Jena, Germany. Dr. Williams has a friend and colleague at a university in Jena who will be a great help to him as he studies German management skills.

The Excellence in Teaching Award has been a very positive and rewarding experience for Dr. Williams. According to his students and all who know him, he truly deserves this prize. If you are looking for an excellent professor, you cannot get better than Dr. Marty Williams.

Focus on Marty Williams

Dr. Williams has three children with his wife Teresa (a first grade teacher at La France Elementary):

- Laurie (a 2002 Clemson nursing graduate)
- Tyler (a sophomore at Clemson who is going to Iraq this summer with the Marine Reserves)
- Anna (an eighth grader)

The Williams family also includes two dogs: Trooper (a German shepherd) and Dixie (a Sheltie collie).

Dr. Williams earned all three of his degrees at Clemson:

- Bachelor's degree in secondary education majoring in history
- Master's degree in personnel services
- Doctorate in vocational-technical services

His hobbies include reading about history (particularly American history) and gardening & landscaping.

A native of Pendleton, Dr. Williams truly loves Clemson and upstate South Carolina. He has lived his entire life in the area with the exception of two years spent in the Marine Corp.

He wants to stay and work at Clemson forever.

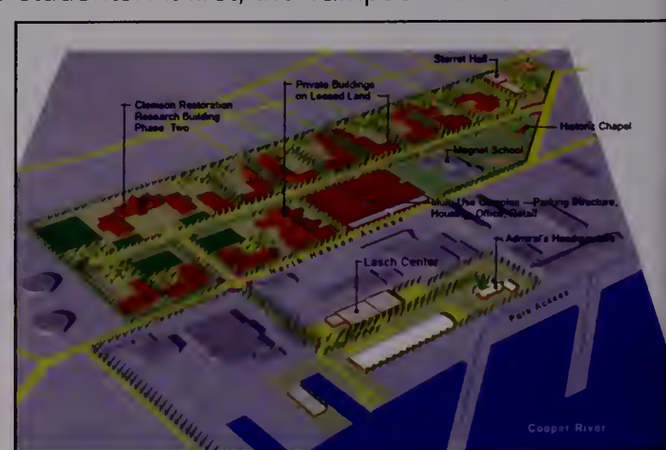
Restoration Institute Breaks Ground

The Clemson University Restoration Institute is developing a research campus in North Charleston, thanks to the city's generous land gift. The city officially decided to donate the land on September 18, 2005, and sometime within the next six months the first phase is expected to be open to students. At first, the campus will include the Warren E. Lasch Conservation Laboratory (where the Hunley is currently located), but will eventually expand to house other laboratories, university offices, incubated start-ups, and firms whose products and services share a common focus on restoration. Clemson's first building is projected to be open to graduate and undergraduate students within three years. When the entire research park is complete, an estimated 2,000 to 4,750 jobs will be created in North Charleston. In addition, Clemson plans to partner with local schools and technical colleges to maximize economic and educational benefits to the city.



Hybrid Furniture

The 17th annual International Contemporary Furniture Fair (ICCF) was held in New York City from May 14-17, 2005. The fair is North America's premier event for contemporary design, drawing more than 18,000 interior designers; retailers; architects; facility managers; wholesalers; hotel, store, and restaurant designers; manufacturers; and students from around the world. As part of the ICCF Design School's competition, Clemson students—along with students from five other schools across the globe—exhibited their work.

Clemson students take design to the next level and display their work to the world

The project, entitled "Hybrid Furniture," explores the co-dependencies between architecture and furniture as well as architecture and graphic design. As professor Virginia san Fratello, teacher of the class that designed the project, describes the project as "a hybrid of floor, wall, and furniture." The structure is composed of 68 ribs that make up ten discrete sections that either fold up into a box or out into furniture. When closed, the construct portrays a message to onlookers about the design process. The text is embedded into the structure, and is actually what holds the ribs together. The project was made with the school's new CNC router without creating any waste.

Senior architecture student Derrick Simpson reports, "I was very proud of our design solution and the hard work and many hours that went into the project. Being a part of something so prestigious and world renowned is an experience that changes my perspective of the things that I am capable of when given the opportunity to rise to the occasion. I am forever grateful for the chance that we were given, and I will continue to use these experiences to better my designs in the future." The other students involved in the project were all either third or fourth year architecture students, and include Melissa Bauld, Sam Bennett, Jeremy Chinnis, Kim DeMars, Megan Duffy, Mason Edge, Matt Frankel, Natalie Gambill, Danny Herrera, Marc Leverant, and Tanner Sharpe.

The Institute's mission is to advance the knowledge of "historic, ecological, and urban infrastructure and to bring the restoration mind set into solutions for the built environment." The focus of future research projects include preservation and conservation of historical artifacts (like the Hunley), designing environmentally-friendly construction materials, investigating natural systems and their ecological impact, and developing healthy communities (by constructing healthy buildings with maximum natural daylighting; designing "green," therapeutic landscapes; and developing walkable, safe neighborhoods). The research park is an exciting project for the Restoration Institute and for Clemson University as a whole because a wide variety of majors support restoration and can become involved with internships on the campus. Thirty-five majors, such as architecture, economics, geological sciences, English, bioengineering, and sociology, can be involved in the projects at the North Charleston research campus.

Partners Brad Smalling and Megan Massett won Clemson's first national public speaking award in Dramatic Duo at the American Forensics Association in 2004. Now both Yu and Smalling serve as leaders of the seven person forensics team. The team is quite ecclectic, with members from a variety of majors.

Each of the team's competitions include eleven events that are divided into public address, limited preparation, and interpretation events. The team competes in many competitions throughout the year, as each one acts as a qualifier for the national NFA and AFA tournaments in the spring. With a two-year streak of bringing national titles back to Clemson, the team looks forward to NFA and AFA in 2006.

Advanced Writing

The Advanced Writing Program, directed by Dr. Summer Taylor, involves all students enrolled in business writing and technical writing classes. Because twenty-nine of Clemson's majors require one of these two classes, approximately 2,800 students participate in the program each year. The classes teach practical writing skills for students to apply in their future careers, but this program is especially notable because of its guest speakers and client-based projects.

Guest speakers from companies ranging from Microsoft to Milliken, visit classes to speak on the importance of developing good writing skills and how they personally use writing as a form of communication in their careers. The program is supported by the Pearce Center for Professional Communication.

In addition to regular classwork and guest speakers, students work in teams on a semester-long project to alleviate problems within local businesses. Businesses request to be involved with the project, and have been impressed with students' work. Recent clients have spanned a variety of industries and have included companies such as Michelin, Anderson Free Clinic, and Blue Ridge Fest. The program has many sponsors besides its clients, including the USDA and South Carolina Sustainable

Ethics Essays

The 2004-2005 J.T. Barton Jr. Annual Ethics Essay Scholarship Competition was won by Matthew Cloninger, a history major from Bessemer City, NC. The contest, which awarded a $1500 scholarship to the first place winner, was for writing an essay about ethical issues emerging from the war on terror. Matthew's paper, "Treatment of Detainees in the War on Terror," took the position that the mistreatment of detainees in Guantanamo Bay and Abu Ghraib was being covered up and no one responsible was being punished.

Matthew, now a sophomore, hopes to go to law school after finishing his work at Clemson. The ethics essay contest, started in 2001, is sponsored by the Robert J. Rutland Center for Ethics. The Center exists to provide a forum for the discussion and promotion of ethics, both within the university and the larger community.

Fighting Back Against Cancer

Professor Wei's dendritoma drug is currently in phase II of clinical trials.

The National Cancer Institute has awarded Clemson University professor Yanzhang Wei a $511,000 grant for two years. The money is being used to develop a drug called dendritoma, which has shown the ability to activate the immune system to recognize and destroy tumor cells. Professor Wei explains that this will be an individualized therapy because two cells are taken from a patient for whom the drug will be used. These two cells, dendritic cells and tumor cells, will make up the drug, dendritoma. Although research shows that the cancer immunotherapy will work better in early stages of cancer development, it will benefit late-stage cancer patients as well.

When asked what made him interested in finding a drug treatment for late-stage kidney cancer, Yanzhang Wei said he is hoping to help cancer patients immune systems fight tumor cells. Cancer is the second leading cause of death in the United States. Of the million people diagnosed with cancer each year, more than half will die. Professor Wei said that conventional cancer therapy, which includes surgery, chemotherapy, radiotherapy, etc., only solves the problem to some degree and is often accompanied with devastating side effects. His hope is that this new therapy will not only be effective but will also have fewer side effects. Professor Wei feels confident that in the near future cancer will be a curable disease. He added, "However, this can only be achieved by a combined effort from the researchers, the founding agencies, the patients, and the communities."

Two of Renee's personal favorite features of the garden were the observation deck overlooking "Leaping Frog Pond" and "The Carnivorous Garden," which features plants such as Venus flytraps.

Renee started on the project during her undergraduate career in Mary Taylor Haque's Landscape Design class. The inspiration for her design came from the garden she enjoyed at her own home in her childhood created by her mother, a landscape designer. She wanted to share the natural soothing properties of water that she had enjoyed by her home's pond with other children who were unable to have the same luxury. Her work on the project has continued into her current graduate student career. Currently, Renee and others are working on funding to install the garden in spring 2006

Partnering with the Rendering Industry

Clemson University researchers in the College of Agriculture, Forestry, and Life Sciences are currently working on ways to improve the uses of animal by-products with new methods from the rendering industry. Rendering is like a recycling program that uses sanitized raw animal material collected from slaughter houses, animal processing companies, and food preparation. The by-products, which consist of animal bones and other parts that are not used for food, are converted into many valuable resources for people to use. Some of these products are soaps, fertilizers, oils, plastics, rubber, and lard.

The CAFLS Dean Calvin Schoulties considers the study between Clemson University and the Fats and Proteins Research Foundation to be a "win-win opportunity" because of the good that will come out of using the raw animal by-products. Another benefit is that the study will develop lower cost processes that will allow the rendering industry to become more competitive, thus saving money in the future.

Research is underway at Clemson that can potentially have a major impact on the rendering industry, which helps produce products such as bio-diesel fuel, soap, plastic, oil, rubber, lard, and fertilizer.

According to Schoulties, this "vital [rendering] industry will find new ways to serve the nation and prosper." New films and fibers will become raw materials and help with the creation of bio-diesel fuel and other beneficial products. The cost-saving processes that are created will help the industries become more successful. Clemson has an opportunity to not only help develop more efficient processing practices, but to also put them into use by using more raw animal products. The amount of raw animal product waste has been reduced because more raw material can be converted into useful products. This opportunity helps improve the quality of animal co-products and education at Clemson.

Replacing Methylbromide

Weed scientist Jason Norsworthy is seeking a solution to one of American farmers' biggest problems: what to do when methylbromide (the nation's primary chemical herbicide) becomes illegal? Methylbromide is hazardous to the ozone layer and was scheduled to be phased out by 2005. However, until a replacement can be found, the ban will continue to be pushed off and the ozone will continue to suffer. The goal of Professor Norsworthy's research is to find a way to use natural toxins found in plants in the mustard family as weed control.

Norsworthy's work began when he noticed a specific plant in the Coastal Plains that no other plants grew near. With further investigation, Norsworthy found that wild radish, along with other brassica (mustard) plants, possesses natural toxins that can be used as herbicides. The chemical compounds produced by the wild radish are effective at controlling the growth of the specific weeds nutsedge, pitted morning glory, and Palmer amaranth—three of the top ten weeds that significantly lower production and increase costs for American farmers. These weeds are especially problematic for tomato and pepper growers, which comprise a large portion of farmers in South Carolina.

Norsworthy's research is important to the farming industry and has the potential to have a large impact world-wide as it provides a way to protect the earth's ozone layer.

CEFPACK Celebrates its First Birthday

Assistant Director of CEFPACK, Scott Whiteside, processes new shelf-stable retort pouches.

One year ago, the Center for Flexible Packaging opened on campus. What makes this center so unique is that Clemson is the only university in the southeastern United States and one of four universities in the nation to offer a Bachelor of Science in Flexible Packaging. The Center gives students hands-on experience in developing ideas for packages and implementing them in a real-world setting.

Companies can join CEFPACK for $30,000 and receive benefits such as the use of state-of-the-art equipment, consultations with leaders in the field, and training. This relationship is beneficial for both Clemson and its corporate members. It puts Clemson in a more visible position in the flexible packaging field. The partners, in turn, receive the fresh ideas students often bring to the development process, the ensuing discussions, and the use of the Center for research and experimentation.

Thanks in part to the leadership of Robert Kimmel, CEFPACK has exceeded its first-year projections. Kimmel came to Clemson five years ago after more than 30 years in technical, marketing, and business development in the film and PET bottle resin businesses of Hoechst Celanese. He is joined by Dr. W. Scott Whiteside, Alison Tuso, Jerry Stoner, and many research assistants and specialists, all of whom have helped to make CEFPACK one of the premier centers in the nation.

Microsoft in the Classroom

Some students daydream about starting their own company while they sit in class listening to a professor's lecture. However, for students in Management 402 and upper-level accounting classes, this daydream is a reality thanks to a grant from Microsoft. Management professor Larry LaForge and accounting professor Richard Dull began using business management software about two years ago, allowing students to actually run a medium-sized company and make all of the decisions for the company. The software—actually used by businesses—integrates operations, accounting, finance, human resources, and other day-to-day decisions that must be made by the company. Management students make decisions in the simulated office products supply store, and then accounting students take the financial information created by the firm and analyze it. Students are already knowledgeable about the software used by the businesses when they are hired, giving them an immediate advantage in the marketplace. Dull and LaForge applied for a grant in the spring of 2005 and received the Pinnacle Award for Excellence in Education at the 2005 Microsoft Convergence for their innovative use of the Microsoft Great Plains Software. The grant not only gives Clemson full access to the Microsoft software but also brings global publicity to Clemson. LaForge said, "Business students learn best when we combine theory with practical application. Our project with Microsoft Great Plains benefits Clemson students and the businesses that hire them."

Entrepreneurial Talent

Starting in 2000, the Spiro Center for Entrepreneurial Leadership at Clemson has sponsored the South Carolina Entrepreneurship Award to recognize and reward student enterprises throughout the state. For the last four years, winners have all been from Clemson University, including last year's winner Mike Garcia, who won for his company, P.S.I. Motorsports.

Mike's business started small as he was questioned about where he got the different parts for his sports car. One day he sat down and wrote out a business plan after realizing, "People had been asking me [about the parts] because I was doing all the hard work. I had done everything and received nothing in return—and the vendor was profiting off me driving business to them!" After great determination and personal sacrifice, Mike's company got off the ground as he began customizing the parts of sports cars. His business started in a large mechanic space in Central, and eventually he "had customers dropping their cars off from other states just to get work done in our facility." The business soon blossomed and found its identity as P.S.I. Motorsports. Mike began "the business of assisting and purchasing imported vehicles, performing upgrades and repairs upon them, and selling them on the open market legally." After graduating in May 2005, Mike left his company. However, he had already developed invaluable knowledge about the business world as an ambitious college student, working sixty to seventy hours a week in addition to attending classes.

Studying Abroad

Professor Jahn and Dr. Clarke take International Business to a new level

During the summer of 2005, thirty four students traveled to Europe with Professor Judson Jahn (also a local practicing attorney) and Dr. Rick Clarke of the management department. The students had the choice to take either one or two classes in management or law while they toured Europe. Classes were held in the hotel conference rooms in the mornings, and then students explored during the afternoons.

Student travelers show off their Clemson spirit after a night of fun in Europe.

By the end of the program, the students had toured much of Europe, including Germany, France, and Italy. Planned educational trips to companies and organizations such as BMW, an Italian winery, and the International Chamber of Commerce furthered students' knowledge of international law and commerce by giving them an insider's view.

Mike Matousek, a sophomore in economics, comments, "My experience with the study abroad program left an impression on me that has changed my outlook on the world and given me a host of experiences I could not have imagined possible before I left." Jahn says that it is just this sort of response from students that motivates him to give up his summer for the program. "The looks on the students' faces when they first see the Colliseum—it's incredible," says Jahn. The program is open to all majors, and will take place again this May and June.

Some of his previously taught courses include undergraduate courses in systems design and telecommunications, graduate courses in data base management systems, and doctoral courses in information systems.

College of Engineering and Science

With eighteen bachelor degree options and twenty-one advanced degree options, the College of Engineering and Science has a lot to brag about. Granting twenty-seven of the first thirty-one degrees at Clemson in 1896, engineering has always played a significant role at Clemson. After some restructuring activities, the College of Engineering and Science

This structure is a common sight for all science and engineering majors during their walks to class since it is located in front of the Fluor Daniel buliding, home of many CES classrooms.

Environmental Design

Five graduate students in the Environmental Engineering program flew to New Mexico in spring 2005 for an International Environmental Design Contest. The competition challenged students to choose from and solve real-world problems that are chosen by corporate sponsors. The Clemson team chose to find a solution for a cheap but reliable way of removing arsenic and nitrate from drinking water in an isolated community.

The team's winning approach was actually the back-up plan but proved to be simple and effective. The team used iron filings to filter out the arsenic and nitrate from the drinking water. The project was judged based on a demonstration of the process, a report, an oral presentation, and a poster.

Team members included John Clements, Rob Green, Ashley Haselden, Amanda Padgett (team leader), and Elizabeth Wood. Glenn Fugate and Jim Navratil served as faculty advising. Both Wood and Padgett felt that the competition was very applicable to the real world and to situations they will be faced with on the job was formed in 1995 and still is a vital part of the University. As more research money pours in and the ICAR project gets underway, excitement is in the air among the University's scientists, and rightfully so, the 2005-2006 school year was full of many accomplishments among Clemson researchers.

"With outstanding facilities and equipment such as this, we are preparing students to be at the top of their game when they enter the computer science work force," remarked President Barker at the October 26, 2005, ribbon-cutting ceremony of McAdams Hall, the campus' new computer science building.

With a background in radiochemistry, Padgett feels that this competition has made her a more "well-rounded student." She now feels more comfortable entering the workforce with the experience she gained from the competition. Padgett and Wood both said that the competition was a huge commitment, but they felt what they gained from the experience was extremely valuable.

This is the 5th, non-consecutive year that Clemson has entered the competition. The team has previously placed second, but the 2005 competition was by far their best. Padgett and Wood said in the future, the team could benefit from having a wider variety of expertise. Balloon Science

In the TigerCUB project led by Dr. Lehmacher, students from physics, mechanical engineering, and electrical engineering work together to create a balloon design for studying the atmosphere. "A joke that some of us came up with the day of our first launch after our first two failed launches was that we knew what it was like to work for NASA in their early days," said Russell Hedden, a physics major. On the difficulties of the project, Dr. Lehmacher said, "There are a lot of challenges and frustrations with such a project, but also a lot of rewarding fun and excitement.

The balloon will potentially reach an altitude of 100,000 feet. Students are in charge of making, launching, and retrieving the balloon. The instruments inside the balloon measure the temperature and pressure of the atmosphere while in flight. Digital pictures will also be taken of the earth and its upper atmosphere. A spotter plane will aid in recovery by tracking the balloon's flight path.

Another student commented on the uniqueness of this research course. "There was no text, no tests, and no notes to copy down," said Jeff Reno, a mechanical engineering major. "Everything we did this year was researched off of the internet and applied to what we were doing. To put it simply, it was great!"

Matters of the Heart

Dr. Vyavahare works with pig valves to simulate human valves.

Professor Naren Vyavahare is working towards finding a cure for heart calcification, an unpreventable disease that comes with aging. He was offered a four-year grant from the National Institute of Health to conduct research on how and why the valves in the heart calcify, and what, if anything, can be done to cure or prevent its occurrence.

Dr. Vyavahare is focusing on the elastin which calcifies in the arteries, making them stiff and rigid, which can lead to heart disease and stroke, along with many other cardiovascular diseases. His research team includes seven graduate students and three post-doctorate students. The team is currently working with animal models to get a representation of why proteins calcify over time. One way they test this is by using pig valves, which are very similar to humans, and inserting them subcutaneously (under the skin) of rats. They then observe which genes are involved with the calcification, in hopes that they can isolate those genes and prevent them from continuing the calcification process. Gene expression and cell cultures are other methods used for study.

At the end of the grant, Dr. Vyavahare hopes to have solved what exactly causes elastin calcification, so that treatments and preventatives can be marketed to the public.

Concrete Canoes

Clemson students take second in the national competition

How many Clemson students does it take to make concrete float? Fourteen is the correct answer. The National Concrete Canoe Competition, which was hosted by Clemson this year, was held on June 24-27, 2005. The competition took place at the YMCA Beach on nearby Lake Hartwell and the University's Conference Center.

The purpose of the competition is for engineering students from all around the country to demonstrate their skill in designing and constructing concrete canoes. Twenty-one teams, including Clemson, competed this year. One of Clemson's team members, Ryan Habersang, summed up the event by stating, "The event continues to challenge the knowledge, creativity, and stamina of students while showcasing the versatility and durability of concrete as a building material."

Clemson placed second overall in the competition. Historically, Clemson has had an outstanding record in this competition, having won fourteen regional titles and three national titles. The team is already in preparations for the 2006 competition. They are looking at different aggregates (such as sand or rock), admixtures, and reinforcement. In addition, they are designing a new hull.

Primarily located in Tillman Hall, Lehotsky, and Edwards Hall, the College of Health, Education, and Human Development is an integral part of the University. With over 2,100 undergraduate students, 1,000 graduate students, and 150 faculty members, it is also quite popular among the Clemson community. The college offers students the opportunity to participate in professional student organizations, like Eta Sigma Gamma (the national honorary organization for health science and health education), the SC Recreation and Parks Association, and the Student Nurses' Association. In addition, students and faculty alike can be involved with research in one of the college's five collaborative research areas: disparities in health education, family and youth development, gerontology, innovations in education, and tourism and community development. The college is also home to many non-degree granting units that serve a wide variety of purposes for the Clemson area and nation as a whole. Such units include the outdoor laboratory, the Joseph F. Sullivan Center, and the National Dropout Prevention Center.

Hands-on Jobs

While the Conference Center and Inn at Clemson is most commonly known for delivering excellent service to all its customers, it also serves as a great way for students to gain experience in their future careers. Since its opening in 1995, the Conference Center and Inn has employed over 3,000 student workers, including many parks, recreation, and tourism management majors.

Students can work on the floor staff, the wait staff, or at Walker Golf Course. They can gain experience in numerous areas, including customer service, event planning, catering, hotel operations, and sales and marketing. Jeff Martin, Director of the Conference Center and Inn, reports, "We try to match students' jobs with their majors and the fields they are interested in to give them good experience that will strengthen their employability."

In fact, students get such good hands-on experience, that several have joined the staff of the conference complex full-time after graduation. Ashley Park, a senior majoring in community recreation, hopes that her experience working at the front desk of the Madren Center will help her land a post-graduation job in event planning either at the Conference Center and Inn or in Greenville. "I get to see all the pieces that go into event planning—catering, the floor staff, everything," says Park. "I've been able to get a real taste of all the details."

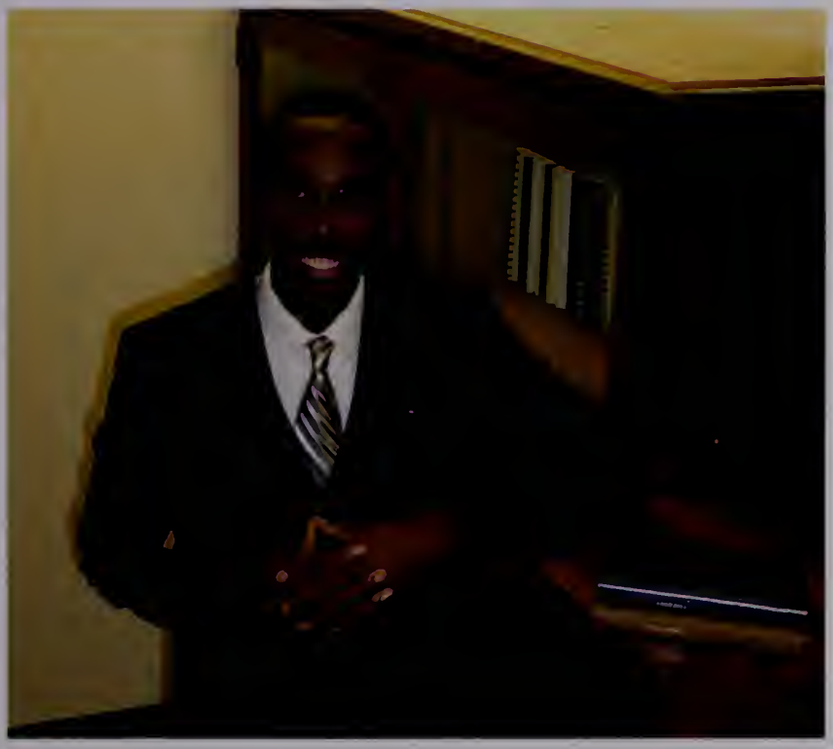
Houston Center

The Charles H. Houston Center for the Study of the Black Experience in Education, housed in Clemson's School of Education, has a new director this year. Lamont Flowers, Clemson's Distinguished Professor of Educational Leadership, has accepted the position. Flower's new job will involve producing and distributing research and information addressing the under-representation of African-Americans at all levels of the education system in America and the academic achievement gap for blacks.

"We want to conduct research and evaluations, implement programs and demonstration projects, and pursue partnerships that focus on examining critical issues in education in the state and throughout the nation," states Flowers.



Flowers received his doctorate in higher education from the University of Iowa. He has coauthored a book entitled, Thinking Like A+ Winner: College Success Skills for Students, has coauthored more than 60 scholarly papers, and is the editor-in-chief of the Journal of the Professoriate.

Established in 1988, the Houston Center provides just such opportunities as it strives to increase the number of African-American students, faculty, and staff in higher education; provide professional development for current educators; and enhance the educational experience across all levels of education for African-Americans. Being that no other public university has a center like that of the Houston Center, Flowers believes the Center's employees are "uniquely qualified to deliver change and improve education."

Bioethics Conference

On Friday, September 16, 2005, over seventy researchers, academians, students, and community members gathered at the Madren Center for a conference entitled "Bioethics, Genetics & the Human Genome Project: Racial/Ethnic Minority Community & Researcher Perspectives." Completed in 2003 in an effort coordinated by the U.S. Department of Energy and the National Institute of Health, the Human Genome Project (HGP) identifies all the genes in human DNA.

The conference addressed the ethical, legal, and social issues that may arise from the project. Experts in the field, such as Dr. Rodney G. Hood of the University of California-San Diego and past president of the National Medical Association, spoke at the conference. Between speakers, attendees broke up into small groups for more personalized discussions about topics such as when—if at all—it is appropriate for people to seek genetic counseling and the societal benefits of the HGP. Overall, coordinators and participants reported that the conference was a great success.

Dr. Shirley Timmons, EXPORT Center Program Director, shares, "As a result of the conference, more people are able to acknowledge a link between genetics and health and to respond accordingly."

Dropout Prevention

The National Dropout Prevention Center was started in 1986 to serve as a clearinghouse, research center, and resource network for issues on high school dropout prevention. The Center has awarded the prestigious Crystal Star Awards of Excellence in Dropout Recovery, Intervention, and Prevention since 1997 to outstanding programs and individuals. In 2003, the Governor and Mrs. Richard W. Riley Award for Excellence in Dropout Prevention in South Carolina was implemented.

The National Dropout Prevention Center is hosting the 18th annual At-Risk Youth National FORUM in Mrytle Beach, South Carolina, February 19-22, 2006. The keynote speakers for the event will discuss increasing an educator's odds with students who are reluctant to learn, increasing graduation rates, and how love can save some students.

NASA hosted the Pre-Service Teacher Institute (PSTI) program, which was attended by two Clemson education majors during the summer of 2005. The goal of the session was to expose college students to problem-based learning and mathematics and science enrichment activities. During the program, the students got to interact with NASA employees and tour the facilities, all while learning how to incorporate NASA's newest technology research into lesson plans for elementary and middle school students.

Glenn Stanton, a junior education major who participated in the program, said, "The program provided us with innovative ways in which we could go about teaching or introducing material. Clemson welcomes Vincent S. Gallicchio into the Clemson family as the new Associate Vice President for Research. As of September 6, 2005, Gallicchio's appointment has been official. His responsibilities include overseeing internally sponsored programs and compliance activities, as well as supporting the university-wide undergraduate research initiative.

Gallicchio holds a Ph.D. in biology/experimental hematology from New York University. He has received many awards, including "Clinical Laboratory Science" picking him as the 1999 top-rated clinical laboratory scientist. In 2002, the Association of Schools of Allied Health Professionals honored Gallicchio by giving him its first Outstanding Researcher Award.

Gallicchio conducted post-doctoral research at the University of Connecticut Health Center in Farmington, Connecticut and at the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York. Most recently before coming to Clemson, Gallicchio served as a research professor in clinical and health sciences at the University of Kentucky Medical Center in Lexington, Kentucky. There he also served as director of graduate studies and director of international studies.

During the summer of 2005, university officials unveiled the plans for Clemson's new automotive engineering graduate school. Located at the International Center for Automotive Research (ICAR) in Greenville, the Carroll A. Campell, Jr. Graduate Engineering Center will stand large at 90,000 square feet. The building's architecture will be distinctive, symbolizing an economic future for South Carolina based on science and innovation. The building will feature glass walls, a curvilinear public atrium, reflective zinc panels, and an elevated display gallery for automobiles. The $25 million building will also include classrooms, laboratories, offices, an auditorium, and open bays for students to use to work on cars and other automotive components. The school is scheduled to open in August of 2006, providing new jobs for 175 employees and an education for fifty students in automotive engineering, with an emphasis on systems integration.

Along with details on the graduate school's building, officials also announced other plans for the ICAR campus. The graduate school will be located next to the BMW Information Technology Research Center. Together these two buildings and an additional two others

According to Bob Geolas, ICAR's executive director, these neighborhoods will include mixed-use facilities with laboratories, offices, shopping centers, and housing. Each neighborhood will be about the size of four city blocks and will be connected to the other four neighborhoods by bridges. The bridges will span across less developed "valleys" that will include conference areas, dining facilities, short-term faculty housing, and pretty landscapes for people to use for meetings or personal reflection.

Students sometimes find it difficult to see how what they are learning in class is useful in the "real world." Consistent with Clemson's goal to become a top twenty public university, The Institute on Family and Neighborhood Life (IFNL) offers students a venue in which to apply their classroom knowledge to "strengthen ties between family and community." Founded as a Public Service Activity in 1999, IFNL is interested in gaining knowledge about "the everyday experience of children, youth, and adults in neighborhood institutions, such as schools, workplaces, religious organizations, civic organizations, and courts." The application of such research initiatives is valuable for the development of stronger families and communities, as well as for public policy concerning issues that affect this development.

One of the Institute's projects is the Strong Communities Initiative, which focuses on the prevention of child abuse and neglect in southern Greenville County. By promoting a support system for families with young children through awareness and community involvement, Strong Communities hopes to integrate child protection into daily community life.

A campaign for Shaken Baby Prevention aims to educate new parents about the dangers of shaking infants. Another project is the Pledge Card campaign to increase adult involvement in the lives of local children.

Undergraduate research assistant Melanie Odom has worked with IFNL Director Dr. Gary Melton on the Strong Communities Initiative, including creating a database of nearly 2,000 families participating in a home visitation program. The development of such resources and programs has brought acclaim and monetary support for the initiative; in 2005, the Duke Endowment gave the Clemson University Research Foundation a grant for Strong Communities in the amount of $1.6 million.

A primary project within IFNL is research conducted about the problem of bullying, with a focus on preventative solutions. Graduate student Hailey Herleman is glad to have been involved with the program, saying "I am proud that my skill set could be beneficial to an organization that is working toward the prevention of bullying for all children across the United States."

Another research collaboration between IFNL Associate Director Dr. Susan Limber and psychology professor Dr. Robin Kowalski investigates bullying among middle school students via electronic messaging, a relatively new phenomena known as cyber bullying. The researchers, along with undergraduate student assistants, were featured in the August 1, 2005, issue of TIME magazine for being the first to conduct a national study of cyber bullying experience.

Cross Section of a metropolis

Early last summer, residents along Broadway Street in Manhattan were presented with a video display of their street, taken four years prior.

This was the culmination of a project coordinated by two Clemson assistant professors of architecture, Martha Skinner and Doug Hecker. The display was shown in a container designed and built by Clemson architecture students and was stationed in a different part of Broadway every day for a week.

In 2001, the video of Broadway was taken in zooms three times a block, and the footage was combined to produce a continuous zoom down the length of the street. The video demonstrated the change of Broadway over four years. The video was shown at three speeds: fast enough to see the street in ten minutes, normal speed, and in slow motion. The fast speed showed the idea of architectural change and topography down the length of the island, and the slow speeds allowed the appreciation of detail. Said Skinner, "When you watch video of a flower opening, you can never see it at normal speed. You must speed it up to understand it."

The project of studying the scope of the city from within was the first of its kind, and when it was collected by the New York Historical Society, they were unsure of how to file it. Skinner and Hecker have created mappings of other cities, such as Atlanta and Florence, Italy, and are making plans for future projects in Rome and Hong Kong.

Imagine a device that can sense the needs of an individual tree in an orchard and tell farmers if the tree is getting enough light and water. Imagine if the same type of device could be used in spy operations to detect a heartbeat through a brick wall. What if the device could also communicate to engineers when a bridge has reached its structural stress point and needs to be repaired? Such devices actually exist and are called motes. They are small wireless computer devices that, when working together, make up a network of sensors that record sound, light, temperature, humidity, motion, and many other types of information.

Computer science professor Jason Hallstrom has created a test bed for wireless sensor networks (WSN) that other researchers can use to debug their WSN systems. Work is underway to allow the test bed to support up to 50 motes, but eventual plans include capabilities for testing hundreds of motes. "Dr. Robot," a reliable

In the past year Clemson University Professor Apparao Rao's lab, in conjunction with the University of California at San Diego, discovered a way to turn what have typically been straight carbon nanotubes into Y-shaped nanotubes.

A carbon nanotube is approximately one-hundred thousandth the size of a human hair, and is typically formed by rolling a sheet of carbon atoms into a cylindrical shape. The new branching technique will allow for the effective rerouting of electrons. The Y-shaped nanotubes when powered by an electrical voltage would behave just as a switch or transistor for processing information.

Professor Rao's lab happened to stumble across the fact that when titanium is added to the reaction mixture, Y-shaped tubes could form. It is believed that these new nanotubes will prove to be better than the typical transistors, which are large in comparison to the nanotubes. The conventional technology used in today's transistors can only be miniaturized to a certain point because of the physical constraints and exorbitant costs. Professor Rao believes that "the Y-shaped nanotube enables us to overcome these problems and implies that we can hope to see highly miniaturized and efficient electronic devices in the future." The Clemson lab is also working to form X- and T-shaped nanotubes.

"Our goal is to make it easier and more economical for application developers to produce the systems of tomorrow," reports Hallstrom. Currently motes are already in use in environmental studies, tracking water and air quality, and in health care, signaling 911 in case of an emergency for people who wear the sensors. The detail in the colors of an image can portray a large amount of information, but for the ten million Americans that suffer from color-deficient vision, such detail is lost. This especially makes reading a computer screen difficult because of the lack of contrast among the colors on the screen. Clemson computer scientists, led by professor Robert Geist, have developed a program that detects color contrast of images on a screen and automatically recolors the images to preserve color detail information for color-deficient

The National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism is an organization whose vocation in life is to reduce alcohol-related problems. This institute does not battle this prevalent problem by itself but instead works hand in hand with federal programs, the public, and other research institutions. NIAAA has been in existence for almost thirty-five years, and was brought to life under the guidance of President Nixon. Alcoholism and alcohol abuse is a serious problem that must be addressed. With the help of the NIAAA the problems associated with drinking will decrease.

Clemson University has just recently received a grant, which will be spread out over the course of three years, from the National Institute of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism. Clemson was not the only university given this large grant; Wake Forest also received it. With the help from the NIAAA, these two schools will now be able to design programs that will be customized to address the specific problems of alcohol abuse that their student bodies are plagued with.

Clemson and Wake Forest have each been given $200,981 for their first year of research which will be used for surveys, focus groups, and interviews involving the students on campus. Since this academic year is only the first of the three years designated for the grant, Clemson's program for alcohol abuse and alcoholism is diligently working on its goal of helping all of those in need of counseling.

Optical and Laser Science Fosters Partnership

While Clemson University professors and faculty conduct cutting edge research and make impressive strides in all areas of academia each year, they often enhance their work and knowledge through outside collaboration. In October 2005, Clemson President Jim Barker and Furman President David Shi announced a new partnership between the universities in the area of optical and laser science and engineering.

Together, Clemson and Furman are tailoring a proposal for an institute designed for the study of optics and lasers. The institute will focus on increasing knowledge of these tools and their applications in society. One area of particular interest for Clemson is how optics and lasers can contribute to economic development, a major focus of Clemson's university-wide research programs. The institute will be dedicated to Furman alumnus and Nobel Prize winner Dr. Charles Hard Townes, who played an integral part in the invention of the laser.

This partnership between Clemson and Furman will also foster joint research among faculty while creating opportunities for collaboration among students from both schools. Everyone comes out ahead when two great universities join together in the spirit of progress.

$15M to Help "Treat the Untreatable"

In the summer of 2005, officials from Clemson University and the Greenwood Genetic Center (GGC) announced a plan that would combine the efforts of all involved to increase research and doctoral education in the field of human genetics. The initiative will look into causes and cures for various diseases and birth disorders.

The plan calls for the building of a new 20,000 square foot center in Greenwood that would house classrooms, laboratories, and offices. So far the initiative has received approximately $15 million dollars in funding, including $5 million in funds applied for through the Life Sciences Act. The GGC plans to match these funds through a donation of land to house the new center as well as access to all GGC research labs and treatment clinics. An additional $4 million has been set aside for operating costs.

Clemson University President Jim Barker said, "Many researchers say we are embarking on the biological century, during which we will discover remarkable ways to treat diseases that were thought to be untreatable. Clemson and Greenwood will be a part of the scientific story that's unfolding."

CONSTRUCTION: WEST ENDZONE

Home games during the 2005 football season took place in a stadium under construction. The West End Zone project, estimated to have a total cost of $54 million, had begun the previous February. Currently, its ribbon cutting ceremony is scheduled for September 1, 2006. When finished, it will boast a Clemson University museum, new football locker and training rooms, business and meeting rooms, a press room, offices for coaches, a medical center, and club lounge areas. In short, Clemson's football program will be run entirely from Death Valley.

But Athletic Director Terry Don Phillips sees the project not as a boost to football alone. When he was the athletic director of Oklahoma State University, Phillips saw a revamped end zone project significantly help the entire athletic program. Said Phillips of Clemson's project, "I see it as a catalyst to help all sports, not just football." Once football entirely vacates the McFadden and Jervey buildings, those buildings can be restructured to better serve the needs of all other sports. Every sport will be able to have its own distinct space, and there will be more locker rooms and training areas all around. In the existing weight rooms, times for all of the student athletes had to be tightly scheduled to accommodate everyone.

Financed by donations and the sale of 914 West End Zone Club seats, the additions to the stadium are estimated to bring in $1.3 million in revenue annually. In addition to enhancing the appearance (and loudness) of Death Valley, the West End Zone is expected to make Clemson more competitive in recruitment of players and coaches.

NEW COACHING STAFF & ATHLETIC LEADERSHIP

Each year many new coaches take their place among the great leaders of varsity sports at Clemson University, continuing the rich athletic history for which Clemson is well-known. The 2005-2006 school year is marked with many changes including one new head coach, Christy McKinney, for women's basketball. She succeeds Jim Davis, who had coached the women's team for 18 years with 14 NCAA tournament appearances under his reign. Davis, however, has not left Clemson University, but has been promoted to the position of Assistant Athletic Director. In addition to Christy McKinney, the athletic department has hired over ten new assistant coaches at the varsity level. These coaches share a common goal for success of not only their respective sports, but also for the success of Clemson University sports and academics. Many commented, as Jonathan Kaplan has, "I noticed that every person I came in contact with from the university or athletic department were all so genuinely caring and were truly interested in learning about me and my experiences–at Clemson, they truly cared. That is something I wanted to be a part of." The experience and enthusiasm of all of Clemson's coaches, new and returning, will help contribute to and promote the success and rich history of the Clemson University athletic programs.

ACC WELCOMES BOSTON COLLEGE

The 2005-2006 academic year welcomed Boston College to the Atlantic Coast Conference. Boston College became the third team in two years to leave the Big East and join the ACC. Its entrance into the ACC comes one year after two former Big East members, the University of Miami and Virginia Tech, left. Boston College is the twelfth member of the ACC, meaning that there can be a championship game for football, like those of the SEC and Big 12 Conferences.

Boston College entered this year looking to build off of years of success in the Big East. Three sports to watch in particular are football, men's basketball, and women's basketball. Boston College finished last year with a 9-3 record in football including a 4-2 record in the Big East and a victory in the Continental Tire Bowl against the North Carolina Tarheels. This year, the Eagles are 8-3 in football, with a 5-3 record in the ACC. The Eagles' men's basketball team is looking to continue the success of a big year in 2004-2005 boasting a 25-5 record and NCAA Tournament appearance. The women's basketball team is coming off of a 21-10 performance in 2004-2005, including an appearance in the NCAA women's tournament. The Boston Eagles will look to repeat the successes of their 2004-2005 campaign in the now twelve-team Atlantic Coast Conference.

TIGERS' NEW STRIPES

Any fan can wear orange, but it takes a true fan to cover themselves with orange. Clemson fans are infamous for their outrageous show of support for the Tigers. Some even go as far as shaving their head in the shape of a tiger paw and dying it orange. It seems that at every Clemson football game there is at least one group of people with their cheeks painted to spell out "Go Tigers" or "Clemson." Others just cover themselves with orange, white, and purple. While some fans resort to extremes to show their pride, others simply have a painted tiger paw on their face. No matter how extreme the display of orange, it is easy to see that "Solid Orange" is truly about pride!

SHOWING OUR SPIRIT & PRIDE

It is not uncommon for cheers to break out among Clemson fans in an attempt to motivate their beloved Tigers. The fans travel from all across the nation to Clemson sporting events, whether at home or away. Although they come in all shapes and sizes, Clemson fans share a common goal of supporting the Clemson University Tigers. With record attendance at the Solid Orange varsity soccer game after the First Friday parade and sold-out football games for the first three home games of the season, this year has been exemplary for Clemson athletics. During the Clemson vs. Miami football game, the noise level was equal to that of a 747 aircraft taking off. Clemson fans have turned out to the home sporting events in droves. The athletic department initiative, Solid Orange events, has helped with many of the lesser attended sports as well.

Clemson has been nationally recognized for its enthusiastic fans. In May 2005, the Clemson University Athletic Department was awarded $10,000 by Planters Nuts for having the "Nuttiest" fans for a NCAA Division 1 school. This is the third consecutive year that the "Nuttiest" fan contest has been given; Clemson follows Virginia Tech (2003) and Texas A&M (2004). The Athletic Department announced that the donation award money will go towards the West End Zone initiative. Clemson has been well-known for their fans overwhelming support of Tiger sports, as well as Clemson University as a whole. No matter how young or old, Clemson fans can unite in one single effort supporting the Tiger athletes in victory.

The 2006 draft will prove very interesting for Clemson football lovers with eleven players vying for positions in the NFL. Texas A&M: Opening the 2005 season versus the 17th ranked Texas A&M team would make it difficult for the Tigers to claim a victory. The Tigers controlled the first half of the game, entering halftime with a 16-10 lead; however, the Aggies looked for a comeback in the second half when they claimed a 24-22 lead. In the final two seconds, Clemson field-goal kicker Jad Dean made his sixth field goal of the night, giving the Tigers a final victory of 25-24 and giving Jad a new school record.

Maryland: Coming off a close victory over Texas A&M, Clemson found a tight match-up with the young Maryland team. By the end of a somewhat slow first half, the Terrapins had the lead with a score of 10-7. A tug-of-war resulted until Maryland dominated 24-14. That domination ended quickly with a swift Clemson comeback in the fourth quarter; Charlie Whitehurst threw two touchdown passes to allow Clemson a victory of 28-24.

Miami: Now 2-0 and ranked 20th in the polls, Clemson faced their toughest competitor yet—13th ranked Miami. In a tough first half, the Hurricanes scored first with a field goal and later added another three points to their score. Clemson retaliated in the second quarter with both a touchdown and a field goal. The second half also proved difficult, resulting in a 20-20 tie. Forced into overtime, the competition continued until Miami finally won 36 to 30 in triple overtime.

Boston College: The Eagles took to the field in their first ACC match-up ever. The Eagles started off right with a field goal in the first quarter. A touchdown by both teams and later a field goal by Clemson tied the first half. The second half proved difficult for both teams to score, leading them into overtime. The Tigers could only muster a field goal while the Eagles managed to win 16-13 with a one yard touchdown.

Wake Forest: After two disappointing losses, the Tigers hoped for a victory against the Demon Deacons. However, in a surprising turn of events, Wake Forest put up a tough fight, tying Clemson 21-21 at the end of the first half. The Deacons rallied in the fourth quarter giving the Tigers another disappointing loss, 31-27.

NC State: After three losses, the Tigers were looking for a strong comeback against the Wolfpack. The Tigers dominated the first half with a strong lead of 28-10 after four touchdowns. The second half was less eventful with only one field goal by the Tigers. They finished with a win of 31 to 10.

Temple: Coming off a strong victory, Clemson was looking for an easy win over the Temple Owls. With four touchdowns and three field goals, Clemson crushed the Owls, who almost faced a shutout until their lone touchdown in the last 6 minutes of the game. Clemson claimed victory with a 37-7 win.

Georgia Tech: A close game between two teams of nearly equal talent made a win for either the Clemson Tigers or Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets difficult. The first half ended with a 3-3 score. The second half saw the first, and only, touchdown of the game by the Yellow Jackets. The Tigers made only two field goals giving Georgia Tech a 10-9 win over Clemson.

Duke: Looking for revenge after a 2004 loss to the Blue Devils, Clemson started back-up quarterback Will Proctor, which proved successful for this Homecoming game. The Tigers crushed the Duke Blue Devils scoring 49 points to Duke's 20.

Florida State: See "Champions" on pg. 165.

South Carolina: After three straight years of losses to the Tigers, the Gamecocks, under new head coach Steve Spurrier, were ready for victory. The Gamecocks led 6-3 in the first half, but the Tigers retaliated with the only touchdown and a field goal in the second half. Clemson once again beat Carolina with a final score of 13-9. Graduating seniors can now boast that they never saw South Carolina defeat Clemson during their four years of school.

After finishing the regular season 7-4, the Clemson Tigers were looking for a bowl game victory after missing a bowl game in the 2004 season. The Colorado Buffaloes were hoping to come back after a combined loss of 100 to 6 in the last two games of their regular season. Unfortunately for the Buffaloes, the Tigers proved difficult to beat. With only a touchdown and a field goal under temporary head coach Mike Hankwitz, the Buffaloes stood no match against the Tigers' two touchdowns and field goals. Competing in the College Cheerleading Championships, Clemson cheerleading does more than simple cheering and tumbling

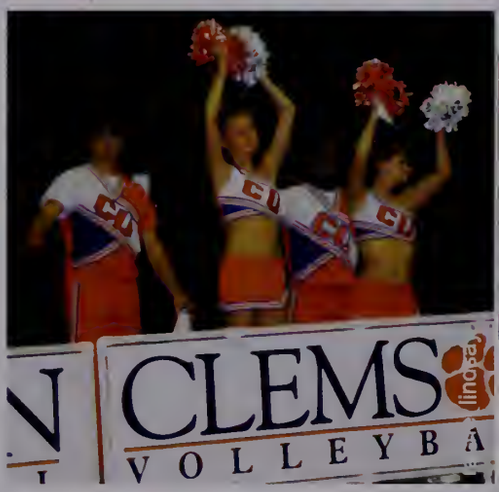
Clemson cheerleading continues to grab the attention of people, whether through their spirited and energetic cheering on the football field or through their success amongst the nation's best cheerleading and dance teams. This year the two cheerleading squads consist of twenty-eight members on the Orange team and eighteen on the White team.

One of the cheerleading team's most notable accomplisments in the 2004-2005 school year was their finish of second place for Division 1A at the College Cheerleading and Dance Team National Championships. The Championships were held in Daytona Beach, Florida, from April 6-10, 2005. This also made Clemson history by being the highest ranking Clemson cheerleading has ever achieved. At the competition, there were over 210 cheerleading and dance teams, with 18 Division 1A teams and ACC teams competing against Clemson. Clemson was runner-up to three-time defending champions, the University of Louisville.



Clemson cheerleading has become a staple of Clemson University athletics, providing enthusiasm and entertainment, even when the Tigers may not be claiming victory. Their contagious spirit can be heard through the Clemson University athletic facilities, setting an example for even the best of Clemson Tiger fans.

Spirit in the form of dance performed by the Rally Cats inspires Tiger fans

rally cats in the valley

Who knew that Tigers could have "all that jazz"? At Clemson University, the talented Rally Cats have all that and more. The Rally Cats are composed of nineteen young women who are determined to dance their way into the heart of Clemson. Even though the Rally Cats may only be seen on the field at football games supporting our Tigers to victory or on the court of Jervey Gym performing their newest routines between matches, their dedication to their sport does not stop at games.

The Rally Cats' season begins with try-outs in April. This newly selected team must then return to Clemson in the heat of summer for pre-season camp. Once these Rally Cats get into the swing of things, they end up practicing two hours a day, four times a week. In addition to their practices, they lift weights with their personal trainer three mornings out of the week. The team also volunteers its time to be able to help young children that share the same passion for dancing during the football season. Danielle Olivier explains that "being a Rally Cat is hard core, but it is all worth it because I love the rush of dancing in front of Tiger fans on game days."

The exhilarating rush that dancers experience is just one of the many perks of being a Rally Cat. The team also gets to travel to away football games to support our Tigers while the majority of the student body has to settle for watching the game on television. This year has proven to be a tough one for the Clemson men's soccer team. Finishing the season with an overall record of 15-6-3, the Tigers fought hard all the way to the end. After having a difficult time in conference play, the Tigers made it to the second round of the ACC tournament. There, they faced a tough UNC team that proved to be a formidable opponent. However, the loss to the Tarheels had no major impact on the Clemson team's morale. The Tigers won a bid to the NCAA tournament where they took out higher seeded teams such as NC State and Creighton. The Tigers, however, met their match as the second-ranked University of New Mexico Lobos barely squeaked out the win during the semifinal round. Clemson has been to the NCAA tournament twenty-five times where they have an overall record of 46-24. This includes two national championships in three appearances in the championship game, seven showings in the final four, twelve years in the final eight, and twenty-one visits to the final sixteen.

Junior Dane Richards led the team this year in scoring. Dane finished with twelve goals and eight assists this season. Junior Phil Marfuggi racked up 89 saves while in goal for the Tigers and was named first team All-ACC. Lead defender Nathan Sturgis was also named the ACC's Defensive Player of the Year. Four of this year's Tigers will say farewell to Historic Riggs Field; seniors Randy Albright, Bradley Gibson, Justin Moore, and Charlie Roberts played their last games as Clemson Tigers this past season. The four seniors fought hard and lead their younger teammates both on and off the field.

Clemson's women's soccer maintains a strong presence in the competitive ACC while...

kicking it into high gear

brian schneider

Clemson's women's soccer once again showed their mettle in the 2005 season. Despite losing four key defensive and two offensive starters, the Lady Tigers showed tenacity in the tough ACC conference. The Lady Tigers started the season extremely strong, with five solid recruits joining the team. The incoming freshmen were extremely diverse in their talents and were a great asset to the program—adding speed, size, and technical skills to the already talented team.

The Lady Tigers stayed strong throughout the season, playing ten ACC games. They also hosted the first annual Carolina Cup at Riggs Field in September with South Carolina, Charlotte, and Furman competing for the championship. The Cup not only raised awareness about the strong Division 1 programs in the Carolinas, it also helped to maintain the strong regional rivalries of the teams. The Lady Tigers placed a strong second in the Cup, and Ashley Phillips was named to the all-tournament team.

Strong wins highlighted the Lady Tigers' season, as they defeated sixth-ranked Duke and twelfth-ranked Wake Forest in back-to-back upsets. The Lady Tigers advanced to the NCAA tournament for the eleventh straight year, a continuous streak since their inception in 1994. In the second meeting of the two teams, Virginia Commonwealth defeated the Tigers in a heartbreaking loss in the first round of the tournament. The Lady Tigers' tenacity and strength shined throughout the season as they continued to compete among the best in the nation.

Despite ACC changes and one of the toughest schedules to date, Clemson volleyball continued its tradition of killing the competition

The lady Tigers varsity volleyball team entered the 2005 season with champion attitudes. Having finished 8th in the ACC in 2004 with a record boasting 20 wins, they were hoping, with the skills of returning players and the talents of new team members, to continue to dominate the court. The team faced several challenges including replacing four starters and attacking a schedule comprised of 22 ACC games. In addition to these challenges, the ACC passed a decision to eliminate the end of the year tournament and instead grant postseason play to the team holding the best regular season record. This decision made each game more important to conference standing than in previous years.

Despite many challenges, the lady Tigers were successful. Among the many accomplishments of the team was a second place finish in the Auburn/ Mizuno Challenge tournament. The teams also boasted wins against FSU, Wake Forest, Furman, and USC. The lady Tigers even broke or tied several individual and team records. Freshman Danielle Hepburn set a Tiger record in the first of two matches against Miami with 12 blocks. In the late-season second match, the team tied the 4th highest number of total blocks per game on record. Many players reached career high figures in hits and assists as well.

In its 28th year of existence, Clemson volleyball continued its tradition of being an athletic force and a highlight of Friday and Saturday nights in Jervey Gym.

Q: Why did you choose to play Clemson volleyball?

A: Being from Pickens (literally just right down the road), I always thought I'd go somewhere far away. In reality, Clemson is the best choice I ever made for its academics and athletics.

Q: What was it like being a freshman on the team?

A: It was awesome! I have learned so much, and everyone has helped with the transition to college. I was never overlooked; the team was very welcoming.

In only the eighth season of existence, the Clemson women's rowing team continues to impress Tiger athletic fans in their record-setting feats each year. The spring 2005 season saw the novice 8+ rowers win the ACC championship at Lake Hartwell and defeat head coach Susie Lueck's alma mater, the University of Washington. This excellence continued into the fall 2005 season as the rowers claimed numerous victories against their tough challengers.

At the Chattanooga Head Race in Tennessee, the championship 8+ rowing came in 3rd and 5th with times of 16:45 and 17:48, respectively. The championship 4+ came in 3rd place at 18:73. However, the novice group, the largest in Clemson rowing history, swept the top three positions of the novice 4+ and came in first in the novice 8+ with a time of 18:20.

The rowers continued to improve by finishing in nineteenth place at the Head of Charles regatta in Boston, Massachusetts in October. This finish was an eleven-spot improvement over the team's participation in the regatta last fall.

The final race of the fall 2005 season was the Rivanna Romp in the Rivanna Reservoir of Charlottesville, Virginia. The novice 8+ team dominated the host school, University of Virginia, finishing first with a time of 15:24.56. The varsity 8+ squad finished in fifth place with a time of 14:27.17; Ohio State claimed this victory with a time of 13:51.88. The Tigers' highest placement in the varsity 4+ was third, losing to first-place finishers Wisconsin. These continued victories and improvements are helping to secure Clemson women's rowing prominence among the ACC and NCAA rowing teams.

There are many necessities that come with track & field, but the most popular is...

the need for speed

'05 - '06

Track and field is a sport that can please any spectator. It encompasses speed, agility, flexibility, and strength. Within this sport there are many events. All of the events fall into the following categories: sprints, middle distance, distance, jumps, throws, and hurdles. Some events include an assortment of these categories.

The Tigers that compete have obviously been blessed with a lot of natural ability, but the rest of their talents in the sport of track and field come from hard work and dedication. For example, the Tigers' first meet of the indoor/outdoor season was December 2, 2005, but they started preparing for this meet back in August. They were busy with pre-season conditioning, which included running the big hill next to Jervey Gym even though tracks are flat. Their season started with pre-season conditioning and ends with their last meet on June 10, 2006, in Sacramento, California.

The life of a track and field athlete is not the easiest. Once the season officially starts, it dominates their lives—but in a good way. These athletes live with their fellow teammates who have similar events to their own. They see each other at daily practices, which include workouts on the track and also in the weight room. Just about every weekend the men's and women's track and field teams travel to different colleges across the country to compete. The meets last from Friday evening to Saturday night while each athlete's own event might only last a total of 10.8 seconds. One must truly love the sport if he or she is willing to dedicate their time and energy to it.

Cross country is not a sport for the faint of heart. It is based on the pure love of running. The men's and women's cross country teams of Clemson practice every day except Sunday, starting as early as the month of June. The teams practice six days a week at 4:00 in the late afternoon heat. Three out of these six days the Tigers have an additional practice at 6:15 in the morning. The practices usually consist of many miles. The cross country team can be seen running all over campus during the fall. To break up this seemingly never-ending cycle, the team sometimes goes and hits the Issaqueena trail, which prepares them for many of the courses that they will have to run throughout the season.

The men's and women's cross country teams both had great seasons. The Lady Tigers got off to a good start with a victory at the Gamecock Invitational. Throughout the season, the team was lead by Casey Phillips, Jennifer Barton, Ashley Robinson, Patricia McMillan, Sunday Ford, Thea Dix, and Candice Johnson. These women and many others on the team competed in eight meets this season, and they placed twelfth in the ACC Championship.

The men's team also put its best foot forward, finishing first in the Clemson Invitational which was their first meet in the fall. Matt Clark, Sean Reilly, Greg Isaacs, Eric Soder, Clay Pendleton, Sam Bryfczynski, Bryce Iverson, and Brian Soder managed to place seventh in the ACC Championship.

These two teams worked hard all season with only one goal in mind—to run their hearts out. Their times and placements proved to everyone that they did just what they set out to do.

Continuing to make enormous strides in success, men's basketball is going...

18-12

Finished 7-9 in ACC play and 7th in the conference

Shawan Robinson led the Tigers in scoring with an average of 12.4 points per game and a 90.9 free throw percentage

The team averaged 74.7 points per game, while their opponents averaged only 68.2 points

After arriving at Clemson a few years ago, coach Oliver Purnell hoped to take Clemson men's basketball from a struggling program to one of the top men's basketball teams in the difficult ACC basketball conference. The 2005-2006 season was a continued success, going beyond the 2004-2005 season. The team finished 18-12 before the NIT tournament, better than the 16-16 record last year. As the team entered the ACC tournament, they had won three straight league games, the most in forty-two years. Also, the eighteen wins were the most since the 1997 season, and the 7-9 finish in ACC play was the highest since the 1998 season.

This season the Tiger basketball team had lost two of its top players, Sharod Ford and Olu Babalola; however, it kept four returners and ten letter winners. Returners Akin Akingbala, Vernon Hamilton, Cliff Hammonds, and Shawan Robinson were prepared to step up to the plate and lead the Tigers into 2006 season play.

The 2006 season got off to a good start; the Tigers held an undefeated 11-0 record until Georgia narrowly beat them 72-69. In the first ACC match-up of the season, Clemson downed Florida State after a two-game losing streak. The remainder of conference play was on-and-off wins and losses, minus a brief five-game losing streak in late January and early February. The Tigers came back in the last three games of regular season play, beating three ACC opponents, although they disappointingly fell in the last few seconds to Miami during the first round of the ACC tournament.

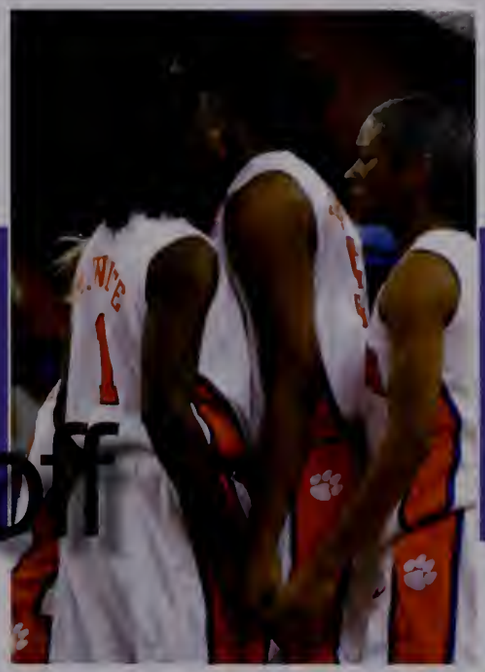
With a new coaching staff and a quickly developing team, women's basketball is...

preparing to take off



The 2006 women's basketball season was entirely different than before as an almost all-new coaching staff took over, led by head coach Cristy McKinney. Coach McKinney came to Clemson after coaching the Rice Owls, leading them to an NCAA berth two out of five years and also becoming the women's basketball coach with the most wins ever at Rice. She was looking to carry that success from Rice to Clemson in the 2006 season as the team looked solid with twelve returning letter winners. Unfortunately, this season will be a starting season for McKinney as she plans to transform the Lady Tigers into a strong force within one of the toughest women's basketball conferences in the nation.

Despite looking to improve on a disappointing season last year, the women's basketball team finished 8-21 in the regular season, about the same as last year when they finished 8-20. In both the 2006 and 2005 seasons, they had a 2-12 record in conference play. The Tigers faced five top 25 ranked teams, including a top NCAA team and ACC school, the University of North Carolina. Once again, in the ACC tournament play, the Tigers suffered a tough loss of 67-53 against difficult opponent NC State.

Even though the Lady Tigers did not improve their overall record this year, a solid performance by the team will help prepare them to become a tougher competitor in ACC and NCAA women's basketball in the future.

Q: What do you enjoy most about being on the basketball team?
A: I love the games. You train so hard every day, so when the games come, you get to compete and put all that hard work into action. It's a great experience traveling around the country on a weekly basis and representing Clemson.

Competitively and eagerly taking to the water, men's swimming & diving is...

going deep

In an exciting season this year, the Tiger swimmers and divers found themselves with wins against ACC rival the Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets and state rival the South Carolina Gamecocks. In the ACC ranking, the Tigers sat atop such powerful teams as Duke and Virginia Tech. Although the team faced difficult competition this year, especially against ACC top-ranked NC State, Coach Christopher Ip was an essential part of guiding the team to many key wins this season.

This year, the Tiger men's swim team was led by upperclassmen Charlie Dillon, Brett MacLennan, Joel Johnson, and Greg Middleton. The wisdom of these experienced swimmers contributed to the success of many powerful underclassmen. Mark Vahle, Attila Ruszka, and Andy Bergen provided many wins throughout the season and hold the key to helping the Tigers' swim team in the future.

Setting the Tigers apart from other teams in the conference is the camaraderie felt amongst the swimmers. Although swimming is generally viewed as an individual sport, the Clemson swim team stood behind each other in every race, even when swimming against fellow teammates. Successful sophomore swimmer Sean Geary sees his team as his family. "You always have someone to push you along in the pool or give you advice," he says. With hours spent training in the pool and on the road to swim meets, team bonding is all but inevitable. The unity of the team is heard within McHugh Natatorium as swimmers cheer each other on during each race. Each Tiger swimmer has sincere interest in the success and improvement of each fellow swimmer.

Getting down to business, Women's swimming & diving prepares to conquer the ACC while...

taking a dive

Under the direction of head coach Christopher Ip for the past two seasons, the Lady Tigers have made their mark upon the swimming world. This year, like past seasons, has been successful for the Tigers, who ranked above Boston College and Miami in the ACC. The Tigers most important and exciting win came in their last home meet in McHugh Natatorium against an ACC rival, the Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets.

In the diving world, Lady Tiger divers found leadership under head coach Leslie Hasselbach. Divers Shastin Leathers and Jess Watcke took top dives in both the one-meter and three-meter springboard dives. Both seniors, the Tigers will miss these successful veteran divers.

The Tigers dove in for a roaring start in September against top-ranked ACC team Florida State. In the pool, Lady Tigers continued to face difficult competition early in the season, swimming against the nation's top team, the Georgia Bulldogs. Their season continued on into February for the ACC Championship and the NCAA championships in March.

Continuing their success in the pool, veteran swimmers Kim Routh and Sarah Cefalu led the Tigers to many important wins in the season. This season also saw the rise of a young freshman, Michelle Parkhurst, who received top times in both backstroke races. Sophomores Jen Grove and Peg Carter were impressive in 100 meter and 200 meter butterfly. Promising young talent spells success for future seasons of Lady Tigers' swimming.

After ending another successful season in 2005 with a 25-11 overall record, the third year of at least 25 wins, and an NCAA tournament appearance in the second round, the Clemson men's tennis program has built up even more excitement for the 2006 season. The team finished with a ranking of 27th in the ITA Collegiate Tennis poll; however, the team has extraordinary ability and a real hope to move up in the rankings throughout the entire spring season.

The team only lost starter Nathan Thompson at the end of the fall season and has five starters and seven letter winners returning in the spring. Coach Chuck Kriese is also returning for his 31st season here at Clemson and is excited about the opportunity his team has this season. He commented, "There is no greater burden than a great opportunity; we have the opportunity to have something special this spring." Despite the returning players, the tennis team signed Kevin Fleck, Paul Koenke, and Mike Muskievicz to the spring roster. All three players have had outstanding success previously and will contribute greatly to the already successful team. This year will also be the last for three of the team's strong players: Sander Koning, Brett Twente, and Ian Keller.

The tennis team is looking forward to a great 2006 season. Chuck Kriese also said, "To be successful you need four things, great players up top, hungry players to push the top players, depth of experience, and great doubles play. This year I think we have all four."

For the first time in his twenty-two year history coaching Clemson Tiger golf, coach Larry Penley has five freshmen on his twelve man roster. Of these five freshmen, during the fall he played two of them, David May and Phillip Mollica. In addition to the freshmen the golf team has added, they have also hired Jordan Byrd to be an assistant coach; this is the first assistant coach for the program since Penley was the assistant under Bobby Robinson in 1983. Jordan is formerly a Furman golf star and the brother of former Clemson All-American and current PGA Tour player, Jonathan Byrd.

To lead the large freshman class, the team has three dependable seniors: Stephen Poole, Martin Catalioto, and Brian Duncan. All three of these senior golfers have played important roles in previous golf seasons and have continued to step up as leaders during the 2005-2006 golf season, playing nearly all tournaments and often finishing with top rankings. Other members of the team include Nick Biershenk, Tanner Ervin, Zack Siefert, and Frank Wrenn, in addition to freshmen Vince Hatfield, Luke Hopkins, Ben Martin, David May, and Phillip Mollica.

The fall 2005 season was off to a good start after a difficult 2004-2005 season, according to Tiger golf standards. The team had reclaimed a position in the top twenty and finished a strong sixth place in the eighteen-team Carpet Classic that included ten of the top twenty teams in the nation. The Tiger golf team hopes to continue the success of the fall season into the spring while they play at numerous golf tournaments across the nation in true Tiger tradition.

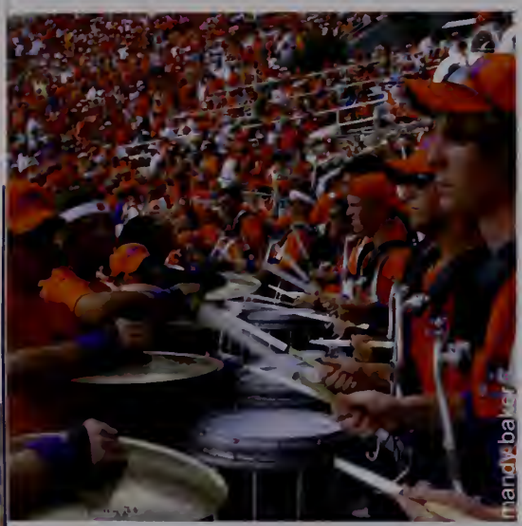
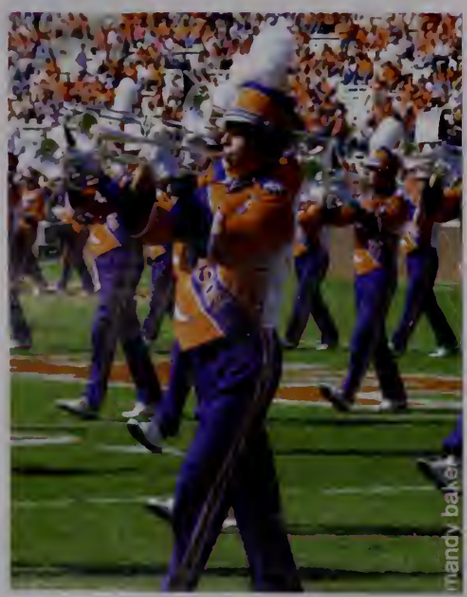
With over 50 years of excellence, Tiger Band continues to impress Tiger fans as they are

shakin' the Southland



mandy baker



mandy baker

Beginning over 50 years ago as Tiger Band, the Clemson marching band became an integral part of Clemson University and the athletic department. They have grown to around 200 members, despite only one major in performing arts at Clemson. From the practice fields behind the Brooks Center to the stands in Memorial Stadium, Tiger Band is well-known to both Clemson students and fans.

With either a pep band or the full band, Tiger Band is one of few college bands that play at all away football ACC conference games. They also play at all home football games with the entire band. At each home football game, a select group of band students called Tiger Tones plays for tailgaters and fans throughout Memorial Stadium. Despite an infamous reputation for "Tiger Rag," the band can play much more than just the "song that shakes the Southland." Each year Tiger Band performs a variety of pre-game and half-time shows, pep rallies and the much anticipated Pass-In-Review where the band showcases their music from the fall semester season. Not only does the band perform at Clemson athletic events, but they also play a major role in many other events on campus, such as the Tigerama and the annual First Friday Parade. In addition, the band is well-known throughout the state because of their many appearances at local band exhibitions.

This year, the band purchased new uniforms complete with stripes, purple pants, and official Clemson orange to match other uniforms affiliated with the athletic department. Throughout the 50 years of Tiger Band, these student musicians have continued to wow audiences with their enthusiastic sound and intricate transitions. Tiger Band will continue to impress for many years to come.

Clemson color guard & twirlers are turning the heads of countless fans as they are going for a spin

As the intensity in the stadium is at its peak, the Clemson University twirlers and color guard take the field during the half-time show accompanying the Tiger Band. Together they perform for thousands of watching fans. The preciseness and capabilities of the girls make the show extremely entertaining and leave the audience captivated.

The Tiger Twirlers continue to amaze audiences when they perform. The team consists of nine members with Jaletta Long as the featured twirler. They even take their twirling to a whole new level by lighting the end of the batons with fire.

The color guard has also had a defining year. Joining in on the celebration of 50 years of Tiger Band, they received new uniforms corresponding to those of the band. They also got new equipment that played an essential role in Tiger Band performances and were necessary to the intricate formations of the entire Tiger Band.

The ladies of the twirl team and color guard are vital assets to Clemson. They provide entertainment in the First Friday parade, pre-game shows, half-time shows, Tigerama, the President's Picnic during the Week of Welcome, and numerous other events. The Tiger Twirlers and color guard will continue to be invaluable assets of Tiger Band half-time shows and of Clemson University athletics.

A pushup for every point can get tiring, but the Tiger presses on and knocks out all 37 at the end of the Temple game.

ROAR OF THE TIGER

Whether pumping up fans at pre-game pep rallies or doing the infamous pushups at the home football games, the Tiger and Tiger Cub continue to be important parts of the Clemson athletic experience. They are seen all over campus during big events, including home football games and other events where fans may be cheering on their beloved Tigers.

Our great Tiger mascots not only provide the fans with enthusiasm and home-team pride, but they also create a bit of humor wherever they can. Walking around the football field with caged eagles while the football team played Boston College or dragging an owl around the field while the Tigers pounded the Temple Owls. The Tiger and Cub are also known for the creative signs they make, such as "SEC corn-fed for a Clemson slaughter" at the Clemson vs. South Carolina football game in the Gamecock's own Williams-Brice Stadium.

Tiger fans of all ages love to see the Tiger and Tiger Cub cheer on the Clemson teams. Kids run with awe to have a hug from this magical creature, college students grab every opportunity to have a photograph taken with their school mascot, and older fans take pride in watching the Clemson mascot at work. Doubtless, the fearless and enthusiastic Tiger and Tiger Cub will remain icons of Clemson University athletics for many years to come.

COMPETITION & SPORTS FOR THE REST OF US

For everyone who is not a part of one of the fifteen varsity sports that Clemson has to offer, they can partake in something just as competitive—club and intramural sports.

Currently there are forty-nine registered club sports that provide nearly every variety of sporting. These include air rifle, cycling, dancing, skydiving, table tennis, wrestling, tae kwon do, paintball, and even rodeo. The selection of club sports that Clemson offers is endless. They allow students to have organized practices, play other teams at colleges around the nation, and give invaluable leadership potential to students willing to run the organization. However, if Clemson does not offer a particular sport, the ability to create a club sport is under the jurisdiction of Campus Recreation.

If students want something that is somewhat less intense, but nevertheless highly competitive, intramural sports may be the ticket. Virtually occurring year round, there are eleven different sports offered by Campus Recreation, including the newest sport during the Spring 1 season of 2006—badminton. These sports also include the widely popular flag football and ultimate frisbee, in addition to tennis, softball, and dodgeball. Students gather their friends and form teams in either the men's, women's, co-rec, or open leagues. These leagues even provide students with the opportunity to referee and supervise the intramural games.

Fencing is a fast-paced sport that typically requires quick thinking and clever footwork to outwit the opponent. Clemson's club team possesses all of these qualities and more. The Clemson Fencers are comprised of about 50 students that travel to both local and national competitions throughout the year. The team is divided into three groups designated by which weapon is used: foil, epee, or sabre. Clemson's fencing team is coached by some of the more experienced fencers on the team.

During the 2004-2005 season, Clemson's women's foil team received the bronze medal at the USACFC Championships and three other members were named as foil finalists. The entire team also made an excellent showing at the SAC Championships where individuals on the team brought home a combined two gold medals, one silver, and five bronze as well as having seven different members named as finalists.

Equestrian Team

Represented by Clemson students of all ages and experience levels, the University equestrian team was well-prepared to face its Zone 5 Region 2 IHSA competition in the 2005-2006 horseback riding season. The team participated in three shows during the fall semester placing well as a team and individually at each of them.

Notable first place finishes at the Lander show included Nicole Balsone in the beginner walk/trot category, Juli Mull in the novice fences, and Jessica Moore in the intermediate fences. Most of the team members finished in the top six of their category at every competition, a significant accomplishment.

In addition to the practices and various horse shows, the equestrian team stayed active in fund-raising, which is necessary to finance travel expenses, maintain a team horse, and encourage involvement in the sport. "One of the goals of fund-raising and the Horse Show Association in general," said freshman team member Nicole Balsone, "is to make it possible for any student that wishes to ride to be able to, regardless of his or her financial situation" (as it can be an expensive undertaking). The Clemson team hosted an Art Gallery Walk at a local stable, from which it earned proceeds from ticket sales and art work sold, and it held a Halloween Schooling Show, offering classes for riders and horse trainers.

Club Rugby

Clemson Men's and Women's Rugby program at Clemson is one of the most successful and well-known club programs throughout the nation. The 2005-2006 seasons for the two teams continued this rich tradition of excellence.

The Men's Rugby team's greatest accomplishment for their Fall 2005 season was winning the GRU Tournament for the 3rd straight year in a row, defeating Georgia Tech 28-8 and Georgia Southern University 37-13.They also ended the Fall 2005 season with a 8-1 record, finalizing their dominance with a 46-23 win over in-state rival University of South Carolina.

The Women's Rugby team also had a successful Fall 2005 season ending with a 7-2 record. The women's team is also on their way to the South Championship and Sweet 16 playoff games. Unfortunately during the Fall 2005 semester, the team lost their coach; however, they have perservered through and look to end their Spring season successful.

Sailing Club

Celebrating the fortieth anniversary of its 1966 founding, the Clemson Sailing Club has grown over the years from the original five founders to around eighty current members. Initially formed to help give students and faculty a chance to sail on Lake Hartwell and pursue a favorite hobby, it fulfills that vision and more. In hopes of sharing their love of sailing, the club members host an "Open Sail" each fall and offer "learn to sail" classes for newcomers.

For the more experienced sailors (and more eager beginners), there is a competitive racing team. One of twenty-three schools in the South Atlantic Intercollegiate Sailing Association (SAISA), the Clemson racing team has shown itself to be a formidable opponent. The fall 2005 team finished sixth, qualifying for Champs, and the spring 2006 team began the season well, placing second out of nine teams in the North Points #1 Regatta. The remainder of the spring season looked promising as Clemson prepared to host a regatta in March.

Club attention and effort were also focused on the new rock construction and preparations to bring back a legendary event, the Tripp Hines Regatta, in the fall of 2006. The Tripp Hines Regatta was hosted annually by Clemson Sailing from 1952-1989, and its worth will help make the fortieth anniversary celebration even more memorable.

The Men's Club Lacrosse team had an exciting year. They finished with a record of 6-4 for the fall. Also, the men's team had a new coach, Buff Grubb. In addition to coaching the men's team at Clemson, Coach Grubb is also president of the Southeastern Lacrosse Conference. Seniors Randy Moran and Jeff Coursen along with sophomore Rob Shaut were elected as captains for the 2006 season.

The Women's Club Lacrosse team also had a noteworthy year. Mary Gamble was named to the 2005 All-SWLL (Southeastern Women's Lacrosse League) team. The women's team picked up ten new players this year. They also taught the Annual Face-off Clinic to high school lacrosse players.

If you have never seen a field hockey game, you are missing out, but you're not alone. Many people do not know about the sport and have never witnessed the excitement and intensity of the game. One of Clemson's Club Field Hockey leaders, Alison Harlan, says it's similar to "soccer with a stick, but the ball is the size of a lacrosse ball." Everyone should take the opportunity to cheer on the Tigers and check out the sport sometime.

Each fall and spring season, the team competes in three or four games against other collegiate field hockey teams from schools like Emory, Wake Forest, and Duke. This spring, they also anticipate travelling to the William and Mary tournament in Virginia.

When they aren't competing, they are practicing and focusing their efforts on rebuilding and reorganizing the team to provide a basis for a strong Clemson field hockey program in the future. The twenty-five women of the Club Field Hockey team love the opportunity this club sport gives them to continue to pursue a passion most of them developed in high school.

Badminton

As the Spring 1 2006 season began, Campus Recreation introduced an entirely new sport to their growing roster of intramural sports: badminton. The eleventh intramural sport offered at Clemson gives students another choice to involve themselves on campus and compete athletically.

This exciting new indoor sport has attracted about thirty teams to compete this semester for the coveted championship. These teams are divided into two leagues, men's and women's; there is not a co-rec league for badminton yet. Students can choose to compete by themselves forming their own singles "team" or they can have a partner and compete in the doubles division of the league. Teams gather in Fike Recreation Center Monday through Thursday to take on their opponent and play the best of three matches to win the game. The competition between the teams is high and will definitely prove to be another successful intramural sport.

Soccer

Intramural soccer has once again proven to be one of Clemson's staple intramural sports. Nearly one hundred teams competed against each other for the championship titles in their different categories. Division into men's, women's, and co-recreational categories, and subdivision into the advanced and novice divisions, provided each student with their desired level of difficulty.

These intramural soccer teams took their games very seriously, which is evident from the highly competitive nature that existed while the teams played against each other. These eager athletes and eleven-person teams took to the intramural fields nearly every weekday in hopes of making their way slowly to the playoffs. There the remaining teams battled for the championships of their divisions, a title they would never forget.

Ultimate Frisbee

Whether playing on Bowman or the intramural fields, ultimate frisbee has become a staple sport of Clemson University athletics and student life. Rain or shine, students can be seen all around campus bolting across fields after frisbees in preparation of the ultimate frisbee intramural season.

This year's intramural experience was no exception, with over 60 intramural ultimate teams taking the field in the Fall I 2005 intramural season. These determined men and women fight to win the victory of champions, but whether winning or losing, they always find the game exciting and fun. The two teams to take home the glory of being named champions were the Dudes and Dolls for the co-rec division and Rusted Curtain for the men's team division. The Clemson tradition of tough competition in athletics and ultimate frisbee intramurals will continue to prove essential to students' desire to succeed.

Flag Football

Whether the plays were made on offense or broken up by the defense, whether the play was open or closed, and whether the temperature was in the 70s or in the mid-40s, the intramural flag football teams always took the field. Teams gave their all in matches which proved to be more than a simple game of football. Players hit the dirt in this non-tackle sport and grins lit up across the field. Big plays were celebrated by group high-fives and shouts of acclamation. And students were able to take a break from the everyday mundane school work or escape the pressing stress of upcoming tests.

This year, over 150 teams of Clemson students took over the intramural fields for seven weeks as they battled for the titles of Flag Football Champion. Only three teams could hold this illustrious title: one men's, one women's, and one co-rec team would prevail in the end. This fall's men's champion was the undefeated WTE, the Flying Squirrels were named the women's champion, and The Deal, also undefeated, took the co-rec title.

Volleyball

During the Fall II season of intramural sports, the volleyball courts in Fike came alive Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights as teams in three leagues battled each other for a volleyball victory. The three leagues for indoor volleyball were men's, women's, and co-rec.

If you walked past the volleyball courts on one of these nights you would hear a lot of noise as players cheered on their teams or yelled "Mine," "I got it," "Outside," "Free ball," and "Side-out" while on the courts. The intensity of the sport was evident on the court during every game.

The indoor volleyball season lasted from the last week of October till the playoffs during the second week of December. Playoff week increased the intensity of the game, as each team competed to become the champions. The winner of the men's bracket was WTE. The ladies of Returning Champs were crowned champions for the women's league. The co-rec champions were WTE.

Basketball

Pass! Shoot! Dunk! Three are the shouts heard on the court from the participants in Clemson's 3-on-3 intramural basketball tournament. Clemson intramural basketball is a great and fun experience that many students and student organizations love to be a part of. Men and women come in and assemble hands of five opposing team, play out a game with all their spirit, and smile at the end no matter which team won. Many fraternities also enjoy competing against fellow fraternities to see who really has game.

With basketball there is always a chance for players to show off their skills, and many guys don't waste the opportunity to show their stuff. There is always someone at every game willing to try a new a move. Both on the men's and women's teams, "Never pass up the chance to attempt a dunk" is a rule to some, whether they can actually do it or not. There is never a boring moment in an intramural basketball game.

WHY DID YOU COME TO CLEMSON? I had actually never seen Clemson until I came here for orientation. I always trust my gut and something about Clemson just felt right.

WHAT IS ONE THING YOU MISS ABOUT HOME? Sunday dinner at my grandparents' house! It was great to get to spend time with my entire family, and besides, nothing can compare to grandma's cooking... since just about everything I eat at school is frozen or out of a box.

FAVORITE CLEMSON TRADITION: The Clemson Ring and Ring Ceremony. I think it's neat to have something that links every Clemson graduate. Whether you graduated in 1955 or 2005 your ring is always there to remind you of the great experiences you've had during your time at Clemson.

FAVORITE SPOT ON CAMPUS: Library Bridge on the first day of class. You always run into a lot of different people you know after spending a long summer or Christmas break away from Clemson.

WHY DID YOU COME TO CLEMSON? I came here for a tour during the spring break of my junior year in high school. It wasn't that I knew right then and there that I wanted to come to Clemson, but I just got a feeling about Clemson that I didn't get about any other schools.

WHAT IS SOMETHING YOU WANT TO DO BEFORE YOU LEAVE CLEMSON? I'd like to see campus from the top of Tillman's clocktower, especially during sunrise. I've seen the sunset from the Clemson House penthouse, but I hear the clocktower view is just as dramatic.

IS THERE SOMEONE WHO HAS MADE A DIFFERENCE IN YOUR LIFE SINCE YOU CAME TO CLEMSON? I met Bobby McCormick, an economics professor, early in my freshman year. Throughout the years, he has been a tremendous teacher, mentor, and friend. It would take far too long to mention all the ways he has helped me, but suffice it to say, I would be a completely different person, for the better, for having met him.

WHAT WILL YOU MISS MOST ABOUT CLEMSON? I will definitely miss the people - not just my friends, but Clemson people in general. We really do have a sense of family, and [illegible] each other.

WHY DID YOU COME TO CLEMSON? I thought the campus was beautiful and the people seemed so friendly.

WHAT IS ONE THING YOU MISS ABOUT HOME? The smell of my house--it has a very distinct laundry/fresh flowers smell that I miss.

IS THERE SOMEONE WHO HAS MADE A DIFFERENCE IN YOUR LIFE SINCE YOU CAME TO CLEMSON? The people are what have made my time at Clemson what it is... I wouldn't be able to just choose one.

WHAT IS SOMETHING YOU WANT TO DO BEFORE YOU LEAVE CLEMSON? Take a dip in the reflection pond.

FAVORITE CLEMSON TRADITION: My favorite tradition is watching purple and orange sunsets.

WHAT WILL YOU MISS MOST ABOUT CLEMSON? The small town feel and the beauty...

WHY DID YOU COME TO CLEMSON? The atmosphere at Clemson truly exemplified the highest ideals that must be attained and actively followed by a university--aspiring for excellence, commitment to service, and promoting a sense of family.

WHAT IS ONE THING YOU MISS ABOUT HOME? While Clemson has been home for the past 6-7 years, I had lived in Moshi, Kilimanjaro, Tanzania since birth. The people, climate, environment, wildlife, and the majestic Mt. Kilimanjaro are amongst the many that are embedded in my memories.

IS THERE SOMEONE WHO HAS MADE A DIFFERENCE IN YOUR LIFE SINCE YOU CAME TO CLEMSON? Dr. Rick Blob (Associate Professor, biological sciences) has always inspired and encouraged me to pursue and explore all the opportunities and options that are available to me with his support, guidance, and assistance.

UNIQUE FACT THAT PEOPLE DON'T KNOW ABOUT YOU: I was born and raised on the foot of Mount Kilimanjaro in Moshi, Tanzania. I do speak kiswahili... I am also fluent in Gujrati (an Indian dialect).

WHY DID YOU COME TO CLEMSON? I was looking for a new experience. I wanted to venture away from home...the warmer climate was definitely enticing. Also, I initially came for graphic communications. This university has one of the best programs for graphics in the country.

WHAT IS SOMETHING YOU WANT TO DO BEFORE YOU LEAVE CLEMSON? I would like to personally meet Mr. & Mrs. Barker.

IS THERE SOMEONE WHO HAS MADE A DIFFERENCE IN YOUR LIFE SINCE YOU CAME TO CLEMSON? Everyone I have encountered holds a special place in my heart. In particular, Sue Whorton has been my guardian angel. She was the first person I encountered during my visit to Clemson as a senior in high school. Sue has been an amazing support and has become a dear friend who I will cherish always.

WHAT WILL YOU MISS MOST ABOUT CLEMSON? The Clemson family... warm-spirited people, especially my dearest friends and health science buddies!

WHY DID YOU COME TO CLEMSON? I grew up in Anderson believing that Clemson was the best university on earth, and I still do. I love that it is twenty minutes from my hometown, that it is full of southern hospitality, and that it has a beautiful campus.

WHAT IS ONE THING YOU MISS ABOUT HOME? I miss my family! I am very close with my entire family. They have filled my life with love, laughter, and happiness.

IS THERE SOMEONE WHO HAS MADE A DIFFERENCE IN YOUR LIFE SINCE YOU CAME TO CLEMSON? My mom has had the biggest impact on my life of anyone I will ever meet. She passed away from cancer eight months after her diagnosis during my sophomore year. Her courage, strength, kindness, and love inspire me. I live each day in hopes of making my mom proud. I know she looks down on me and is still a huge part of [illegible] TRADITION: I love how southern hospitality permeates our campus [illegible] is what makes Clemson such a special place--a true family. Perhaps th[illegible] fall in love with this place.

Tiger's eye view

Chris Bruno_graduate
"Ban the Woo Hoo! I'm an old-school Clemson fan. The Woo Hoo is not part of the original Tiger Rag. It doesn't sound very cool on TV when 80,000 Tiger fans yell WOO-HOO real loud in the middle of our fight song. It's lame."

Laura Hart_junior
"Absolutely! What better way to aggravate opponents than to take up what they use to make fun of us?"

Tiger Rag: Should we keep the "Woo Hoo" or not? Why?

Ashley Hulett_junior
"Woo Hoo, because it feels right!"

Blake Williams_freshman
"To each his own I say. I am personally not a huge fan of the Woo Hoo, but I have been known to do it from time to time. Originally, Clemson wasn't spelled out during Tiger Rag, so maybe this is just the new evolution of the fight song."

Tiger's eye view

Which is the best dining hall, Harcombe or Schilletter?

Diana Bennett_junior

"Harcombe has the best variety and the nicest staff, especially the lady who makes my peanut butter and jelly sandwich. She is the best!"

Caitlin White_freshman

"Schilletter. They have better/fresher salads and healthier food options, and their ice cream is better."

David Powell_graduate

"Harcombe! It's not a college dining hall unless there are line ladies muttering gibberish while asking you if you want the light or dark blob of unrecognizable food!"

Christopher Simmons_senior

"Neither, are you kidding?"

NAME: Tracy Ard AGE: 19

MAJOR: Political Science

YEAR: Sophomore

INVOLVEMENT: FCA Small Group Apprentice; Service and Religious Organizations Representative for CUSG Organizations Committee; Academic Integrity Committee; CBE Committee

WHY DID YOU COME TO CLEMSON? Of all the places I visited, Clemson was a home-away-from-home. It provides a true family atmosphere that nurtures students fully as a complete person.

WHAT IS ONE THING YOU WANT TO DO BEFORE YOU LEAVE CLEMSON? Knowing I made a difference to someone; that I passed on the spirit of Clemson and of the Clemson Family that was instilled in me from the day I arrived on campus.

IS THERE SOMEONE WHO HAS MADE A DIFFERENCE IN YOUR LIFE SINCE YOU CAME TO CLEMSON? There have been a lot of people who have taken a genuine interest in my well-being and success from advisors to fellow CUSG members. I don't think I could name just one. I've been so blessed to be surrounded by so many amazing people.

FAVORITE CLEMSON TRADITION: Homecoming! It's one of the best feelings I've had here to be out on Bowman on the last night before the judging. Everyone is working hard on the floats and having a wonderful time just being together.

FAVORITE SPOT ON CAMPUS: President's Park... great place to take a de-stressing walk.

I am memorable
Clemson University's campus is decorated with many memories of the past. Statues, like the one given to the school by the class of 1944 and the one of Walter Cox found in the plaza, remind those on Clemson's campus of the rich history upon which this university has been built.

"I haven't gotten one this year, but I'm in an employee space right now!"

How many parking tickets have you gotten from Clemson Parking Services so far this year?

Kayley Foley_junior

"Way more than I should have; Clemson Parking Services is the biggest load of crap. We pay to park and there are not enough spaces, so then we get fines for making our own spaces.
Free parking, man!"

AGE: 19

MAJOR: Psychology & Spanish

YEAR: Junior

INVOLVEMENT: Southern Accents; Gamma Phi Beta; IPTAY; Women's Glee; undergraduate research assistant for Dr. Eric Muth, psychology

WHY DID YOU COME TO CLEMSON? I wanted to go to a fairly big, southeastern university. When I visited Clemson, I fell in love with the campus and the people!

WHAT IS ONE THING YOU MISS ABOUT HOME? I miss the seasons of Wisconsin.

IS THERE SOMEONE WHO HAS MADE A DIFFERENCE IN YOUR LIFE SINCE YOU CAME TO CLEMSON? My mom made me realize how important family really is when I started living so far away.

WHAT IS SOMETHING YOU WANT TO DO BEFORE YOU LEAVE CAMPUS? I'm looking forward to studying abroad in Spain.

FAVORITE CLEMSON TRADITION: The Alma Mater always sends chills down my spine.

FAVORITE SPOT ON CAMPUS? Bowman field on a sunny, Sunday afternoon.

If you were stranded on a deserted island and you could only take three things with you, what would they be?

Lauren Hardin_freshman
"I would take a really big book to read to keep myself occupied, the largest pack of matches I could find to cook food with, and sunscreen because I burn very easily!"

Thomas Bonner_junior
"A beautiful woman, a Swiss Army knife, and a case of beer."

i*am security
The Student Patrol is comprised of about thirty students from various majors who work several hours each week running the escort vans or helping out parking services at different events. Without the Student Patrol, services such as the escort vans would be hard to maintain.

i am: genuine

NAME: Monica Kasse AGE: 20

MAJOR: Microbiology

YEAR: Sophomore

INVOLVEMENT: Gamma Sigma Sigma (National Service Sorority); Best Buddies; Dance Marathon

WHY DID YOU COME TO CLEMSON? I started off my freshman year as an engineering major, so the strong program drew me here. But once I came to visit, the southern hospitality and comfort I experienced made my decision final.

WHAT IS ONE THING YOU MISS ABOUT HOME? Some people would call me crazy, but I have to say the snow. I grew up in Ohio and for all 18 years I was not a big fan of the winter weather, but now that I don't experience it, I am beginning to miss it.

FAVORITE CLEMSON TRADITION: First Friday downtown... I love First Friday. It is such a great time to get everyone together in the town and there are so many fun things to do, not to mention free stuff. It is such a great time to get together with your old friends you haven't seen all summer, and even meet new ones.

FAVORITE SPOT ON CAMPUS: Bowman field. It is such a great place to sit and chill and play a game of football with your friends. Even going back to think of the history that happened on that field when Clemson was a military school is just amazing to me. I think it is the best after the winter weather is over and spring is rolling around.

I am art
From the microscope in front of Hunter to the I-beams by Lowry, science meets art all over campus. Some of the random structures around campus, such as the "paper airplanes" that spot the landscape, are purely for entertainment.

"3; computer science, undeclared, graphic communications."

Hilary Johnson_ freshman
"1 officially; 5 unofficially; visual art, PRTM, elementary education, visual art, management."

How many times have you changed majors? What were they?

Ashley Myhal_sophomore
"4; I applied to Georgia Tech last year as a business major then changed at orientation to architecture, which I dropped out of halfway through the first semester. I was thinking about civil engineering, but was major-less for another semester, then decided to switch schools to Clemson (which was, thankfully, a good choice). I applied as elementary education, then changed to psychology over the summer. Hopefully that was the last time."

Several times each semester, the girls of Tri-Pi, aka "The Singles Club," get together to celebrate their independence and singleness by going out for a night on the town.

The 2005-2006 school year was another great year for the sisters of Kappa Kappa Gamma. From having a truly amazing recruitment to winning various competitions on campus to just having a great time with sisters, this year was simply fabulous for the ladies of Kappa Kappa Gamma! These sisters did it all! Their philanthropies—Reading is Fundamental, Kappa kickoff, and the MS Walk—all proved to be vastly successful, and their many social functions were all a big hit. This year, no matter where the lovely ladies of Kappa were at, what they were doing, or who they were with, these sisters were always sure of one thing: "KKG was the place to be!"

Originally called the "CU After Six Singers," this mixed a cappella group started in 1986. The "CU After Six Singers" sang jazz and pop arrangements as an encore performance to the choral concerts. After spending a year as the "Jazz Singers," the name was officially changed in 1996 to "Southern Accents."

Aside from the name, not much has changed. Southern Accents still performs a cappella arrangements of primarily jazz and pop music, with some country, oldies, and Clemson classics. They still possess a love for music, performing, and for the friendships that they make throughout the process.

This last summer, Southern Accents recorded a new CD, Unleashed. This year the group has been busy mastering and promoting Unleashed—as well as performing at events like CLEMSTOCK, singing in the President's Box for the Boston College football game, and giving shows for local high schools. But Southern Accents is not all work and no play; this year the group enjoyed their annual fall retreat in Hilton Head, a tailgate with the Georgia Tech a cappella group before the game, and just spending time together.

RHA, short for Residence Hall Association, is an organization that represents all of the students who live in campus housing. According to Kimberly Gill, the President of RHA, "This organization gives students that live in Clemson housing the opportunity to make a difference and have fun making that difference."

The body of RHA is made up of two senators from every housing area around campus. This organization enjoys helping all campus housing students, whether that is with a program or a problem. They sponsor many of the programs that Area Councils, the governing body in the residence halls, suites, and apartments, provide for the residents in their area. One of the two advisors of RHA, James Robilotta, made this comment regarding RHA's development, "RHA is taking Clemson's residential life to the next level. Through potent programming, fantastic fundraisers, and obnoxious cheers, the voice of RHA is not only being heard on campus but across the region as well."

In addition to our Senate meetings once a week, we also represent Clemson University at conferences on the state level at the South Carolina Organization for Residence Education, the regional level at the South Atlantic affiliate of College and University Residence Halls, and the national level at the National Association of College and University Residence Halls. Stephanie Jacobson, a senator that is heavily involved in our programming committee, feels, "RHA is a great opportunity to jump into activities and show your spirit for our University." RHA is well-represented through our motto in our attitude towards campus residents: "Take the time, give the effort, make a difference."

Campus Crusade for Christ

Want to worship with 300 other students? How about join a Bible study? Through activities such as the weekly meeting and small groups, Campus Crusade for Christ offers the average college student a not-so-average university experience. With full-time staff and one-on-one training, students grow to know Christ in new ways.

Not only are students equipped for life, they also make friends for life. Pig Pickin's, semi-formals, and retreats are just some of the ways in which students develop relationships. Students also have the opportunity to venture on spring break trips and summer mission projects. These trips focus on both equipping as well as sending students into the community.

Crusade is more than its activities, however. Psalm 133:1 says, "Behold, how good and pleasant it is when brothers dwell in unity!" Students enjoy this unity only because of Jesus Christ. He alone binds CCC together. Become a part of the community: www.everyclemsontiger.com; www.clemsonccc.com.

After restructuring the previous activities planning board, ClemsonLiVE was formed to plan everything from large events like Death in the Valley that have become Clemson traditions to offering weekly entertainment options like movies in McKissick Theater. ClemsonLiVE planned many campus events, including a dive-in viewing of Jaws at Fike and a "newbie" tailgate specifically for freshmen.

Since its founding on December 4, 1906, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc. has supplied voice and vision to the struggle of African-Americans and people of color from around the world. Alpha Phi Alpha, the first intercollegiate Greek-Letter fraternity established for African-American, was founded at Coernell University in Ithica, New York by seven college men who recognized the need for a strong bond of brotherhood among African descendants in this country.

Alpha Kappa Psi

The Omega Upsilon Chapter of Alpha kappa Psi strives to accentuate the collegiate experience of our Brothers here in Clemson. Our organization helps to build brotherhood, which teaches our members to do what is best for all people here at Clemson. Alpha Kappa Psi gives the Brothers a chance at lifelong learning experiences by seeking opportunities from other established businessmen of their real-world experiences. As a whole, we work hard to improve not only Clemson University, but also the surrounding communities by taking part in various community service projects. This helps our Brothers become prepared for future endeavors where they can show others the quality of education students receive from Clemson.

All along the path
There is darkness
A trembling girl
In a sea of fear
Doubt
Uncertainty
Of the future
The present
What's to come
And what will no longer be

Who knows where this girl is going?
Who knows how she got there?
Why?
Or when will she be leaving?
No one.
For her path is one never taken before
It is clearly her own
Though remnants of the past still haunt the woods
These trees are new to the world still young
And still fresh

Amongst these faces
These dark woods
That is where she'll find herself
When she stops to look
To reflect
There she is

All along the path

"To walk with - must - walk alone? The love and salvation - Whom shall I fear?" ~ [illegible] 1

To old friends and new alike,

As a freshman, I have mastered the art of transitioning between serious student to self-proclaimed dork. (Or is that one in the same?) I have my share of "wisdoms" yet to learn, but of one thing I am sure:

"Don't put it off; procrastinate now!" - Anonymous

On that note, I congratulate all of the graduating seniors who wouldn't heed such brilliant advice. Good luck to my fellow Tigers in all of your future endeavors.

Letter from the Editor

Mandy Baker

Dear Clemson,

I am honored to have had the opportunity again this year to work on such an important piece of Clemson history. This volume of Taps, and the memories made while completing it, will always be special to me. I hope that you all have found something of importance to you within these pages. From major campus events to the daily routines and varsity athletics to intramural games, our staff strives to cover what is important to the memory of the year. We are all individuals who belong to this great Clemson Family, and I hope that this year's book represents the best of our individual and collaborative efforts.

Go Tigers!
